You would sue the one with deep pockets, probably the manufacturer but it could also be home depot or sears or wherever one purchased it.

It is compliant, yes. But it doesn't work. That is the basis of the suit in small claims court.

The manufacturer can then be ordered to provide all customers with a free filter upgrade, depending on what the judge says.

Well, I'm not doing the suing...but I would if it happened to me, believe me.

"just another stalking thread" says Mark Dunderhead Morgan when users respond to Mark's posts.
But when Mark does the same????

That's different. He obviously does not know the definition of the word.
Mark is a hypocrite.

* "Sorry, Hans, MARS >>>IS<<< ham radio." :-)

This assertion is simply not correct. In order to join MARS and receive a MARS call sign, one must be approved by a branch of the military service for that purpose and one must be a present, retired or family member of a military member. Additionally, there are separate MARS frequencies outside of the allocations reserved for the amateur service that are excluded from regular Part 97 use.

How can Len say MARS is "ham" radio?

It is a special military radio service. I think Mr. Anderson may be too devoured in the treasured memories of his old Austin Healy with the 23 channel CB (before his XYL made him sell both) to think logiocally about matters concerning real amateur radio (i.e., not 11m).

People who use the "f" word are generally too restricted in vocabulary to choose a more appropriate word to emphasize their point. It also suggests a lack of self-control and frustration at one's ability to debate an issue on the basis of facts.

Do you think "lacking in self-control" is an accurate characterization of your execrable life?

Stalker, have you ever considered just ending it all to stop the suffering of what it must be, to be kb9rqz? End the misery and follow your innermost cogitations.

generaly perhaps

OTOH all people that insisying on calling people child molesting and object to the word fuck are suffering from serious lack of abilty to debate

perhaps

but you refusaul to debate anything and to use either a valid debating style or your real name proves you can't deabte or face facts

Just for starters, it pieces me off that the FCC doesn't even host the download of the amateur pool questions "right-out-and-openly" on their web page. This alone gives the VEC and arrl MUCH more credibility then the toothless old grumps deserve. And, I have complained about this ... I will continue to do so, use the public funds and keep this outta private hands and influence!

The arrl need to go, and Carl is NOT looking like a good replacement with NCI when he boot licks ... amateur radio needs a new start and some new blood ... someone needs to kick some real booty here.

Isn't it? :-)

I come from both sides being long-livers. "How long?" you ask. "This long,"
I reply. :-)

JS, you have to realize that the resident loose cannon in here is like a vial of nitroglycerine. The slightest little shake will make him EXPLODE! Really not good for one who claims to be a "nurse."

Well, he is only a licensed Practical Nurse, not an RN.
Certainly NOT a licensed Medical Doctor despite his trying to play one in here a few years ago. WE (all the participants in RRAP) still haven't seen a single bit of ID from him and his 18-year USMC active-duty time.
Not in at least 8 years of his bragging (in text) that he was IN.

On the motor: Good on that! Go for it. When you get one, include a picture of it with the XYL on it. Or just the XYL. Cecil has a snazzy picture of himself on his

Harley but I think your XYL looks better than Cecil.
[no offense, Cecil, you are an OK guy, I'm hetero... :-)]

Oh, did I mention the rig that will be in the console of that bike? A commercial unit, heavily modified with a bit "chicken" in it, if ya git ma drift! Takes a special key to activate chicken so I don't get the darn thing confiscated!

Yep, the road is owned by eleven meters! When ya run with the BIG DOGS, frequency is where it's at! See ya in the "Great 49", maybe even Hawaii. I can't wait for a warm spring to get here ... I just might retire when I think about it ... Ya never know what ya'll hear on ten either, keep an ear out, we may be commin' to your town!

Don't worry, a lap top and wireless will go with me.

Gotta get the little gal on a diet so we can get that pic on the bike with here in a halter top!

JS, amateur radio is not even close to their main task of regulating ALL civil radio in the USA. However, they could make a small link to www.ncvec.org if they bothered.

For real complaints, you might address the FCC on why they do NOT bother with many updates of the amateur radio page under the Wireless Bureau. They haven't kept that updated but sporadically since the NPRM on Restructuring (FCC 98-143) came out in 1998.

I'd say the NCVEC is reasonably up-to-date given their voluntary task of coming up with new QPs every three years or so. The ARRL is only part of the VEC.

Sorry, but the privatization of radio operator testing put that in very private hands of the COLEM and the VEC.
I haven't looked for a COLEM QPC but have no doubt it exists somewhere. My First 'Phone that morphed into a GROL went lifetime, no renewal and I have no need to go look for that commercial pool.

That's a subjective opinion, JS, and I won't fault Carl S. on what he has done and stated in various places. I disagreed with what NCI did NOT do immediately on FCC 06-178 when it first broke news last December...but then NCI is really an international movement, not strictly one for the USA.

While the USA is a LATE-comer on tossing the morse code exam internationally, there still exist other countries who have kept it, one way or another.

In my opinion, NCI could either dissolve or change away from being USA-oriented with a different direction. NCI's basic goals have largely been realized and, in that, was a success to my mind.

As long as there is money to be made from publishing to a niche hobby activity, the ARRL will be firmly entrenched.
Human attrition will eventually cause their metamorphosis.

I'm sorry but I don't understand what you mean here. The Amateur Radio question pool was developed by a committee composed of representatives from the various Volunteer Examination Coordinator organizations noot the FCC. The questions are posted on the Internet and are available for anyone to view. If you go to www.qrz.com you will find a routine that will allow you to take a sample quiz. If you do this enough times you will be able to pass the various level tests.
The ARRL does not have anything near exclusivity in this process. They only have one vote in the process. I don't know exactly how many other organizations there are but I know of at least three.
As for replacing the ARRL as an orginization feel free to do so. So far they are the only group to stay in business.

Subjective? Well ya, all you see in my posts are one mans humble opinoions. But then, the president pulls his pants on one leg at a time (well, I believe he does!) and no mans opinion counts more than mine--not even his!

NCI has REAL relevance, in my humble opinion ... your mileage may vary.

Yep, time for NCI to step into phase two, hope Carl is "psychic" enough to realize that!

Time for the "common ham" to fire up. Setup some web pages with training, "elmering", etc. Heck, where is the group rec.radio.amateur.new-licensees ??? Instead, we have self-protecionist hams creating groups like "rec.radio.amateur.good-ole-boys-club"

Krist, Dee has better ideas than most, that alone should shame us into better behavior and efforts ... are we men or are we mice?

The world is owned by the common man (in this case, common ham)--strange how so few "common men" realize that we put amateur radio forward "one ham at a time ..."

The little amateur who got me started, ran his rig with dignity, gained my REAL respect and was one "HELL OF A GOOD JOE" (might I add, was LOVED by his town and community?) and will always be remembered in my book. I cannot find his equal easily these days ...

The arrl can go to ... well, you know where ...

Warmest regards,
JS

Well, exactly!

Get rid of these fools and let the FCC set the exams ... gawd, that doesn't take an einstein does it?

I am all for private enterprise, however, when we talk about laws, guidelines are rules governing pubic properties--we as "the people" only have that right ...

Actually, I should have been more clear on this.

Our representatives, and though the gov't agencies they design, should set these "rules and regulations." "We the people", should vote in and support only those representatives which serve us and our public interests. Yanno, like they are supposed to work in our best interests?

Yanno, like the public airwaves are a natural resource given man by his creator. And, since we realize that some of us "common citizens" might work in our own best interests if not watched closely, may indulge in stuffing our own pockets if not watched closely, may use "public resources" for our own personal use and that of our friends if NOT watched closely, so that we may pay attention and CLOSELY to giving all citizens use of their creator given resources.

In my humble opinon this has not been done for decades past, indeed, the same old protectionist policies and guidelines are being hoisted upon us again.

We need the FCC to accept total control of these things, away from public enterprise and interests. We need the public servants to control these things so we can kick their butt when they start working in their own interests.

The arrl has been working in its' own best interests for decades. They have been able to do so because the avg citizen is ignorant. The avg citizen doesn't even know how to wire an electrical outlet in their own home--let alone build an xmitter or power amp.

Get real, time for private interests to be kicked out of control of public airwaves!

JS

You are falsely assuming he could pass element 4. He's been out of his profession for quite a fews years now and appears to have signs of memory lapse, such as commitments he made 7 years ago etc..

My ex-husband's hearing was severely damaged in the service of his country also. He had 70% hearing loss in both ears and constant, loud tinnitus. In daily life, he basically got by via lip reading. He didn't even realize how bad his hearing actually was and that he was lip reading until he had to take a physical for something. Yet he passed the code test. All he had to do was adjust the pitch to avoid the frequency of the tinnitus and turn it up LOUD (I had to leave the room or request that he wear headphones). He passed his 5wpm in 1992. So I don't buy the couldn't learn it at all statement. VE teams were REQUIRED to make accommodations for individuals with hearing problems, although generally they did need advance contact so as to be able to arrange to have any special materials needed.

Those of my friends who are loosing their hearing as they age tell me that they find it easier to copy code than voice. They can adjust the code pitch and volume to whatever they need. Voices, with their constantly varying pitch and volume, become much harder to copy as their hearing deteriorates.

There are and were many individuals who could have helped him find a way to master it. Handi-Hams specialized in helping all those with various disabilities.

no such assumetion is made butsince you bring it up I expect Len certainly could although I doubt that Len could sit down and pass element 2 and 3 and 4 in the same

I'm glad he will be enjoying his new privileges and hope he finishes his

It is, however, very sad that he did not find the proper help to learn code.
Many in his situation and even worse off did manage to do so once they found the proper assistance.

There never was a waiver for the 5wpm. Once a person had passed the 5wpm, waivers were accepted for the higher speeds of 13wpm and 20wpm. Between the fact that my ex-husband had severe hearing problems and that we both later became VEs, we were familiar with the rules on waivers. When he had a hearing test around the time that he was going through the licensing, it was astonishing how bad his hearing really was. He'd been lip reading for years without ever realizing that he had been doing so.

The waivers ONLY applied to code speeds above 5wpm. Until the code test requirement was dropped altogether on Feb. 23rd, there was never a waiver for the basic 5wpm code test.

There are at least 12 VECs. These VECs create a Question Pool Committee and create the pool and maintain it. Since the question pool is available in its entirety for free from a number of websites and since the FCC does not create nor maintain the pool, there is little reason for it to be on the FCC web site.

This does make a lot of sense. We seems to gradually lose our treble response and our ears respond more to base as we age, which is not as intelligible on our typical audio equipment. Conditions improve when the receiver treble can be kicked up a bit, CW is not an issue. For me, things sure have changed over 10 years, giving me a higher proclivity to code QSO's than speech. I have almost no problems with fenale SSB voices but some of the male transmissions are so low that they simply sound like strange unintelligible noises that can sometimes by detected OK though it can take a lot of attention soan.

No, you did not vote for the VECs. However, anyone could have sent an objection to the FCC if they thought a given organization was unsuitable for this program.

Yes they are responsible to you under the law since they are accountable to the FCC. If any VEC (these are organizations by the way), is found to be remiss in its duties, they can loose their standing as a VEC. At the time the system was being developed, any organization could have applied and if they met the FCC's standards could have been certified as a VEC.

Yes the VECs are responsible to you under the law since you have both the right and responsibility to file a complaint with the FCC if you find that they are not acting according to the requirements of the FCC.

The VECs do not use any public resource monies. The expenses of testing are covered by the testing fees, which are set by the FCC.

The VECs were selected and appointed by the FCC from various organizations applying for this task.

You may not like the VE system, but amateur radio experienced a surge of growth once exams became available at times and locations that candidates could get with ease and without having to take time off work.

I spend enough time at a computer so I prefer my radio communications to be voice or CW. Although I've set up and tried the digital modes, they were boring.

Really, well, I prefer most of my communication to be digital--digitized text to be specific, here on the net, but digitized voice when I use my cell phone. I'd prefer digitized voice packets on HF, however, the dinosaurs which are available there are not hip yet, the new blood will change that--hopefully ...

My friends hearing rolls off drastically just above the normal speaking range. At the audio frequency of morse code his hearing is something like 64dB down below where it should be. You can't copy what you can't hear. His hearing aids only do so much. The funny thing is that he can copy the code visually with an LED or lamp that flashes but they wouldn't let him test that way. Anyway, it's no longer an issue is it? He'll get on the air, and he WILL be an asset to the amateur radio community because that's just his nature. How can that be bad?

Hmmm. My hearing rolls off when I am forced to copy cw, always turn on the cw to text software and plug the computer into the rigs audio. When I start typing 80+ WPM the extras even know I am up to suppin' <grin>

You can become a VEC if you so desire. All you have to do is find enough hams to support your efforts and create an organization to conduct examination sessions.
There is nothing magic about the VEC. It just takes a lot of unpaid work on the part of a lot of people. Yes some get paid to process the paperwork and file the actual application for your license. No one is getting rich on this program.

Well, most of us don't. Fact is, there are very very few FCC field offices left. People from Oregon would have to go to Seattle or San Francisco to take their tests (as would hams from Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Utah, etc..) I was fortunate when I originally got my ham ticket that the Portland field office was still in existance. It's no longer there. Most can't take the time off work in the middle of the week to drive 200 miles (more or less, from Portland to Seattle) just to take a test. With the Volunteer Examiner program, it allows hams to take tests usually at a place within a few miles of their own home town, with flexible times, usually on a weekend when they don't have to give up valuable work time.

I agree but Steven James Robeson, K4YZ, wrote it. See the quote marks up there?

You were not present when Robeson was told of his obvious error...by several others. I posted the link to the DoD directive on MARS operations.

>In order to join MARS and receive a >MARS call sign, one must be approved by a branch of the military service for

You had best look up the various service branch MARS web pages and correct yourself on the above.

>Additionally, there are separate MARS frequencies outside >regular Part 97 use.

Not only am I well aware that MARS frequencies are NOT in US amateur band allocations but I have so stated before in here.

>How can Len say MARS is "ham" radio?

Here's a clue, Gomer, "Len" did NOT say that. "Len" simply quoted Robesin's Gomer-Pyleish statement to Hans Brakob.

>It is a special military radio service.

MARS is an acronym standing for Military Affiliate Radio Service.
MARS is NOT a tactical or strategic radio service for US military radio communications...it never was. The predecessor to MARS was born before WW2 in the US Army, a quaint idea to get US amateurs involved in hopes that some "new technology" in radio might be tried out or shown to the US Army. As far as radio design for the Army is concerned, that did not appear to happen.

>I think Mr. Anderson may be too >devoured in the treasured memories of his old Austin Healy with the 23

The '53 A-H sports car was traded in for a 61 Chevvy Impala convertible. The CB was transferred to the Impala and used often for years after that. Oh, and the 11m CB band USED to be part of the 11m US amateur radio allocation prior to 1958.

Steppinwolfe, was there anything else you wanted to fuck up on "corrections" or are you satisfied with fucking up your present posting? On the F-U meter you are only hitting about an S7 with a great deal of selective fading. Try tuning up your mind a LOT better next time, OK?

All of that depends on the mindset of the "men" you are

I agree but conditionally. I think it has POTENTIAL relevance.

The IARU started the code revolution in prompting for the re-write of most of S25 at WRC-03...the WRC that made it possible for individual adminstrations to toss the code test at THEIR option.

THIS newsgroup was a "good-ol-boys-club" when I first found it on DejaVu. There was no end of morsemen in here putting down ANYONE who didn't love, honor, cherish and obey morse code.

There is no longer any morse code testing for ANY US

Be sure to include the proposed tax increase for funding when you get the FCC to resume doing the testing. Their budget no longer includes money for such as they are getting the testing done for FREE by volunteers like myself.

It was REQUIRED that they let him test that way. If they did not, they were wrong. Of course one does have to give the team time to make these preparations and get the necessary materials. As I said earlier, the code pitch can be changed to whatever frequency would have worked. Again if he needed a very low pitch, it was REQUIRED that they accommodate that. If they did not, they were wrong.

What abusing of the new NG, fatboy?

I don't see you there.

Lennie's crossed over, but he only made two posts before starting in on his own ad homien attacks. We'll see ho long it takes him to really dig in...I don't give him a week. he can't help himself.

Now..to address my previous comments in this thread...What's the Yep.

It's day 6...there's been VE sessions all over the place, and considering Lennie is in the middle of Southern California, I KNOW he's been within 1 hour's drive of dozens of VE sessions since.

I >>MAILED IN<< an applicaiton for a club station via a third-party intermediary and it's on the system already.

No...Lennie won't be getting an Amateur license any time soon. He doesn't need one in order to be a saddle sore in this forum.

He can sit in a VE session from now to the Second Coming. Lennie Anderscum won't get an Amateur license now anymore than he was going to get one "out of the box" seven years go.

Lennie's on an ego trip with a one-way ticket. He was "too much of a man" to sit with mere mortals for a license then, it's going to be even worse now. The denominator has been lowered even further, and that spits in the face of a "real radio professional" like Lennie.

Nope. I'm not crying about it and never have. I don't need any stinking ham bands. I have fifty-nine channels (actually more) that I can legally use without any liscence whatsoever.

With a GMRS liscence, I can use sixteen more channels for a total of seventy-five channels (actually more) that I can legally use without a ham liscence at all.

And recently, someoe at my house just purchased a new "two way radio" that gives me an extra FRS channel that doesn't use any of the standard 14 FRS channels and doesn't use any of te GMRS channel;s, and is perfectly legal for use in the U.S.

It was even advertised as "use it at sporting events and shopping malls to stay in contact with your family and friends".and as "two-watt radio".

I'm not sure what the range is of it yet. I'll test it out when the weather gets warmer. This radio also doesn't have any way of monitoring for other people's transmissions before you tansmit.

But you don't need to since it automatically sends a code that ollows only the people in your group to heaar it, You can't set it to hear other people's transmissions even if you try to., even if they're on the same channel.

And it can't be picked up by radio scanners the genreal public uses, it can't be picked up by frs radios that use the standard 14 frs channels. It can't be picked up by GMRS radios or ham radios either. Although I'm sure the hams will try to.

It seems to truly be a radio with your own private lFRS channel.

And yes, it's FCC-approved. So don't give me any of this "you're using an illegal radio transmitter on frequencies you're not authorized to transmit on" garbage.

No code was NOT "porrly promoted".

It was in "Omni", "Popular Electronics", "Popular Science"
"Popular Mechanics", and "Popular Communications" on many occassions over the years. Stories on the "new" codeless license also appeared in organizational periodicals such as AARP's magazine. It was written about in the Wall Street Journal and New York Times.

Perhaps you didn't know about it because you were so busy being the only drafted dyslexic gay pagan Army chemical corps officer at the time it was enacted...?!?!

I disagree. Not know more. Just know different. Other people have said there hasn't been any new improvements in ham radio technology in decades.

The morse code requirement was probably holding them back.

Look at other industries. The latest improvements made were made by people not familiar with the old technology, but familiar with the newer technology.

In the computer industry, most of the recent improvements have been made by people not familiar with the punch card sysyem.

If they were still required to learn and use the punch-card system, they wouldn't have as much time to study all the newer technologies and the improvements either wouldn't have gotten made at all, or at least not as fast.

They would still bee stuck uing the old very slow computers that use punch cards.

The same goes for a lot of other industries, also.

Although with other things instead of computers and punch cards.

I said nothing in this post about you posting in RRAM, Morkie, albeit I did in another thread.

Congratulations on making a post that didn't position yourself as a victim or called others names...That has to be a record.

So you want to give this much power to the government?? Not me. This was an extremely progressive idea and actually gives a great deal of control to the people. It maximizes the personal freedom and choices of the participants. Would you really like to go back to the repressive "old" day??

The Volunteer Examiner program puts control where it belongs, directly in the hands of the citizens rather than the government. The government then takes its rightful place in promulgating, administering and enforcing the rules rather than dealing with all the minutia on a day to day basis required to run the program itself.

Michigan has done the same thing with its driver's licensing. Both the written and driving tests have been contracted out to private companies.
The state monitors the program and handles the broader functions such as maintaining the database and enforcement.

No...Lennie won't be getting an Amateur license any time soon. He doesn't need one in order to be a saddle sore in this forum.

I suspect he couldn't pass element 4 no matter how hard he tried.

What abusing of the new NG, fatboy?

I don't see you there.

Lennie's crossed over, but he only made two posts before starting in on his own ad homien attacks. We'll see ho long it takes him to really dig in...I don't give him a week. he can't help himself.

Now..to address my previous comments in this thread...What's the REAL excuse keeping you from erecting an HF antenna when you had already claimed to have one?

I think he has so much garbage cluttering his yard that he can't find room for supports.

The history of computer science disagrees. Most of the pioneers of the

Since the FCC now permits the VECs to directly enter the data in the database, it's simply a matter of how quickly the VEC organization can check the paperwork. These days it runs about 1/2 week to 1&1/2 weeks. In anticipation of getting an unusually high number of submittals, the ARRL at least put on extra staff to handle this. I had the test session the evening of Feb 23. Reviewed and mailed the paperwork on Feb 25. Both the new licenses and the upgrades appeared in the FCC database at the end of the day on Feb 27th. This is actually faster than usual.

Vanity license applications take several weeks though.

I don't regard privatization as "progressive," only economical for the government...and, perhaps, less economical for the individual depending on where they live relative to any testing location.

COLEMs have it a bit easier since they can both teach a commercial licensee and test them in a continuous course.
That is more convenient for the newbie commercial license applicant. That is similar to school courses with the FCC exam as the "final."

VECs - usually - do not sequentially teach and then test.
They can if they so desire, but few VEs are qualified or have experience as teachers. VEs can proctor a test with little experience other than handling paper and seeing that all the blanks are properly filled-in and check answer sheets against a template. That is not a Masters or Doctorate level work. :-)

You did not attribute the quote by name or even say it was a quote. You merely inserted quote marks which, when not properly attributed, makes grammatical nonsense. However, poor grammar is to be overlooked for many individuals including yourself in this newsgroup.

Really. OMG, I thought MARS was a Top SECRET classified confidential and highly tactical/strategic radio service that was used on different frequencies than the ham bands so we couldn't hear what the military was saying. Did the Russians know about this too?

It only served to put a few service people in touch with their loved ones during WW2, korea and VN. Then this "new technology" as you put it was all forgotten due to the other big secret that I think you're holding back on:

Roswell.

And the +/- gravity amplifiers.

After the saucer crashes, the military considered ham radio to be relatively low tech so MARS was relegated to a low place on the military budget, but I know you must deny this :-))

Well, I might suggest you avoid the "f" word when posting. Remember, whatever you post here is and always will be accessible to everyone who cares to research you on usenet. Do you have grandchildren? Whatever you write here will be publically available to hundreds of your future offspring, some of whom will likely be researching usenet for the profound writings of their great great great grandfather Len. Authoring posts like this with the "f" word will show them how little class their ancestor had. Ever think of that, bud?

However, I think we all can agree it will be 20K times worse for offshoots of kb9rqz (I feel sorry for them already!).

A vanity license application requires an already-granted amateur radio license. New licensees will take longer to process, both at the ARRL (for ARRL VEC) and at the FCC.

OK, I think you are right. If he purchased the ARRL Extra Class Handbook and

NOT to the military nor the particular MARS group.

>> As if everyone here has read all of your posts over the last 10 years? I see >> you like to flatter yourself.

No. No flattery is necessary. Brian Burke, Hans Brakob and myself tried to correct Robesin but - as usual - he refused to be corrected. That particular thread ran for months. That quote was VERY familiar to ANYONE seeing it at the time.

>> Really. OMG, I thought MARS was a Top SECRET classified confidential and

You are writing gibberish again. MARS did not carry any classified or secure communications nor was it "secret" to any amateur years ago. I doubt ANY MARS station ever carried classified communications.

In 1954, for example, the Tokyo MARS station was a two-room office space at the FEC Hq building (the former Japanese military Hq building during WW2, would later revert back as the Japanese Self Defense Force Hq when FEC Hq was moved to Fort Shafter, HI. MARS got to use bits and pieces of RF transmitters on a very low priority - if and only if it was available. I know this as a member of the REAL tactical-strategic Army station that served the FEC Hq at the time. In late 1955
the Tokyo MARS station got moved to Hardy Barracks in west-central Tokyo and was permitted to get multi-band beam antenna and more amateur-like equipment.

NOT "during" WW2. NOT "during" the active part of the Korean War. The Korean War entered a permanent Truce period in July 1953 and that has NOT ended to this day.

In 1954 and beyond, there were sufficient voice telephone circuits available commercially to enable "loved ones" to communicate directly with military personnel...IF and only IF those personnel were free to use such commercial communications. Officers and other higher-rank civilians were able to do so but not the vast majority of the rest.
Red Cross messaging was available (on a low priority to military comms) and usually sent over non-busy TTY circuits after the end of a "radio day" (which was about 2 to 3 AM local Tokyo time). This was seen at ADA Control center where I spent a month filling in for a regular center E-5 who was on emergency leave.
During that time one of the TTY relay tape handlers on midnight shift got to see a copy of a Red Cross message saying he had just become a father. Proud new papa was then chewed out by the Officer in Charge of TTY relay for "looking at unauthorized messages!"
That OIC was later reprimanded by the signal battalion commander for that...and wound up on the immediate list for return to civilian life as a reservist, something that was the Army's equivalent to "downsizing" after the Truce.

MARS is given credit for its messaging during the Vietnam War morale support. You can find that at the US Army Center for Military History on Signal Operations

during the Vietnam War. The DoD dates the 'Nam War from 1965 to 1973 and is over 30 years in the past.

No. My grand-nephew is presently serving in Iraq as a PFC with a heavy-equipment moving and repair unit. I am proud of his voluntary service and know damn-fucking-well how he and his buddies "talk" as one who went before him.

You've been taking lessons from the Nun of the Above?

Drop the ANONYMOUS Sister act with knuckle-spanking ruler. One transgendered sissy in here is enough. Two

No, that's WRONG. Given the posting examples of one who managed to get the callsign of K4YZ (there are no psychological tests of radio amateurs), HIS progeny are probably carrying his gene material. That is NOT GOOD for the human race. Or for the USMC.

Steppinwolfe, why go on with your ANONYMITY? You don't fool anyone. You are simply ignorant of radio communications in general, certainly so for the USA which has a lot of communications history available for the learning. Get some help with your "belief" in aliens and flying saucers. Or go infiltrate "Area 51" and get arrested for trespassing on US military property...you will then get some "help" on your crazy belief trauma.

Are those on "the test" also? Quel horrible! :-)

Just WHO in the "amateur community" are "personal goals and motivations" to be demonstrated TO?

Am I required to fit some kind of nice-nice mould crafted by some crochety morsemen in Newington and then give tithe to them? Am I to worship at the feet of morse-tested "extras" in an AMATEUR activity? WHY is that?

Sorry, but when someone in the "establishment" (such as the mould-crafters and their acolytes) tries to mold me into Their WAY OF THINKING, they WILL get considerable resistance.

Remember basic electric theory? RESISTANCE will dissipate power. Morsemen once thought they had achieved a "match" with the FCC with their mighty macho morse manner. The no-code-test advocates RESISTED and the FCC "matched" with us. The "power" of the morsemen was dissipated. Let that be a lesson on preaching "personal motivations" and "goals." To you, not me.

Regards (just the same),

According to www.wm7d.net figures, the number of new issues or updates for 28 Feb 07 was 814. The number of Vanity calls issued for 28 Feb 07 was 82.

According to N6ZZK of the local ARRL VEC group the processing won't be complete for 10 to 15 days.

Why the sigh? Do you really want Len to get a license?

Even if Len does someday get a license, he will still be a newcomer to amateur radio. A neophyte, a tyro, newbie, novice, etc. Then it will be up to us to Elmer him, both by advice and example.

For example, simply getting the license is the first step. What rig should he buy for CASH?
What antenna? Power supply? Accessories?
Should he attempt to build any of it? What about mobile operation? CC&Rs? RFI?
Operating procedures? Awards? Contests?
Vanity call?

Think about it.

JS...this is why Leonard H Anderson's word and reputation in RRAP

That would be true, Mark. The ARRL website Search seems to look only through their own VEC's processed records. A more comprehensive Search can be done through the FCC (who do the FINAL license grants) but getting to their specific Search for amateur radio licenses is more complex; the FCC Search involves ALL licenses for ALL radio services unless one indicates specific search areas.

According to the wm7d.net statistics, the number of new amateur radio license issues for 1 Mar 07 were 729. That includes upgrades and Vanity calls, Club calls, the whole magilla. A sizeable number and it takes several people at each VEC to sort through the paperwork, accept or reject based on many criteria, etc., etc.

If a VEC receives 800 applications from VE teams a day, it would have to process 100 per hour to complete one day's mail-in. For eight people doing processing that means each person would have to do 12 1/2 per hour (if they worked straight through all hours...and few paper-handlers in offices work "straight through").

Complicating the process is USPS delivery if the VECs do it like the FCC does it. The sheer size of the USA means that all the Pacific Island places will get there LAST and Hawaii, Alaska will be almost as late. The ARRL VEC final processing takes place in New England which is almost as far removed from southern California as Hawaii in terms of USPS handling. The ARRL has always been oriented towards east coast thinking and doesn't seem to go for pushing the envelope on handling far-away (from them) USA locations.

thanks for making that clear the ARRL processed upgrades new licneses equal to .1 percent of the totla licenses issues plus what ever the REST of the VEC processed

stil an incredable amount of work for just a few days depends Our Local team of ARRL VEC's (which had too many procoders to want to do a session on the 24th submits electronicaly to CT which then processes them electornicaly to the FCC but many VE Teams mail to their home base then digtize and submit to the FCC

Oh, my, are YOU going to show me how to work a radio?

Something beyond 1930s state of the art, I hope.

How many KiloWatt rigs has Jimmie Noserve ever tuned?

Has Jimmie Noserve ever tuned up anything beyond the 23 cm amateur band frequency? Anything below 550 KHz?

Has Sister Nun of the Above ever sat in the right seat and knuckle-spanked a pilot talking on a civil airways radio? On a private sailboat?

On land during a heavy rainstorm? On land in the desert?

How much broadcasting experience has Miccolo Tesla got? AM, FM, or TV?

>Then it >will be up to us to Elmer him, both by advice and
>example.

Will you "stick by me" as good as Borden's "Elmer white glue?"

Will you be part of the firing squad to "discipline"
the slightest lapse of FORMAL PROTOCOL in amateur radio operation? Or is simple beheading your thing?

Would I receive the "rack" or "quartering" if there is no desire EVER to use OOK CW morse?

CONGRATULATIONS on some (finally) clear thinking!

How about an Icom IC-7800? Yaesu FT-2000D?
IC-756PROIII? FT-DX9000? Kenwood TS-2000?
Yaesu FT DX 9000MP?

How about a tower-mounted rotatable Log-Periodic?

A Bencher Inc. "Skyhawk 3X10"? A Butternut HF9V?

Will the Department of Water and Power of the city

NEVER! Neophytes, Novices, etc., should NEVER try to build anything more complicated than building an Elecraft KIT...

ABSOLUTELY! By-the-Book Letter-Perfect as it was VANITY CALL?!?!? Oh, my...

Can't use "N2EY" or "K4YZ" or "K8MN"...those VANITY

Have to go out to a furniture store to get the RIGHT VANITY!

Robesin didn't know what the MOD was. Robesin didn't know what a Base Support Team was. It was all about eavesdropping on "private" calls between deployed pers and their stateside wives...

Anyone at all. Robesin's exact quote has become the flag of both MARS and Amateur Radio stupidity.

When the Air Force deployed troops to Somalia to bring over the 10th Mtn and others, the assigned AF MARS Call was classified until it was activated. Fortunatley, the Air Force had robust enough communications to not have to activate the callsign for AF personnel. The USN was being stingy with MARS, and only when I offered to activate the AF MARS for MWR calls for the USMC personnel did the USN let go of a callsign for the location. Sad, but true.

Robesin was never an "OIC" therefore he could not have been the actual culprit. However, he claims to have been an "A" NCOIC.

Robesin was not there.

Robesin's USMC didn't use the "f" word, according to Robesin. This is how I know that Robesin wasn't a Marine.

Fortunately for Robesin, none of his progeny were able to read/write.

True enough. However, I'm not so sure that any of Robesin's DNA has survived...

I hesitate to put an oar in because I'm one of the brand new Hams. We managed to get two dozen people to a one weekend tech class that were mostly drawn from the membership of Community Emergency Response Teams. I think that the service can be alive and well if it continues to adapt itself to public need rather than to individual preferences no matter how strong.

Having said that I will now admit that I was somewhat disappointed by the ease with which I passed the exam. I had a novice license back around 1973. At that time you had to pass the general theory to get a technician class license. Obviously that is no longer true.

Now at the risk of being dangerously on topic let me ask the question I came here to ask in a new thread.

If Riley were not breathing down my neck and if I had a better antenna I'd be looking forward to Morkie getting on HF. Maybe I could play some HF theme music to go along with Mark's entry into HF, but I won't. I don't want to be forced to retest a third time.
Besides, Chief Stenger is keeping a close eye on me these days and I am too busy stalking Lloyd Davies.

You, Mark, are a liar. You almost always hijack topics for your jumbled, mind-twisted comments.
If necessary, I can post thread after thread to prove the point. Google has hundreds of them archived.

The more I read, the more convinced I am that you have a deep-rooted mental disability. There is something severely wrong with your mental processes Mark, and I don't mean just your dyslexia.
You have a glaring problem that the rest of us can see, but you are incapable of admitting same...deep denial, Mark. Very deep.
I posit that any person, you included, and especially you, who posts forty, fifty, sixty or more posts per diem to these newsgroups and, who makes the effort to use nyms, has a problem. Apparently your personal life is shallow indeed. Life must be a bore up there in Chassell. Your forays into the theatre are obviously a dismal failure.
Is Gav indeed your wife? Wait. I don't care. Since she has not taken your last name one must assume that the two of you are cohabiting and she has no desire to be known as Mrs. Morgan. Who can blame her?
Any woman who would live with you, Mr. Bisexual Morgan, has a screw loose herself. One can only draw the conclusion that Gav, like you, has more than a few loose ends or she'd not have taken up with you.
Is Gav one of those "artsy" types who wears floor length 70's style hippie dresses with beads on each ankle? You know...the old Hippy Gal whose hips have gone wide? Hints of a mustache on her upper lip? Unshaved legs? Granny glasses? Old open-toed leather sandals? Career Student? White wine? Did she have nowhere else to go?

Does Gav have her own bedroom? Bet she does. Do you make her split the rent? I have ten dollars and a Long John Silver's meal that says she doesn't climb into bed with you. Ever. Not once.

Personally, I think the service needs to stop focusing on raw numbers of licensed hams, and instead on the quality of those hams licensed. I would rather have 5 hams licensed who are interested in antenna theory, emergency communications, etc., rather than 10 hams who are interested in using ham radio as a cheap cell phone.

The current structure of the theory examinations is a joke. They really do nothing to ensure the applicant has a through knowledge of the topical material. For example, you could have failed each and every question on rules and regulations, and yet still obtained your license, simply because you know math well. This is not, IMO, a good thing. We are, however, unlikely to see this change for the positive, and highly likely to see the theory examinations weakened further as we move to a "simply mail in your 605, no exam needed" ham radio of the future.

An FCC Commissioner could snap his/her fingers and make an application "happen", but it won't ever happen with YOUR name on it...

"No Code" has been the law of the land for over a week, now.

Any perusal of ULS will show hundreds of people who've taken the test SINCE then are already licensed and have been for days.

Other than "I'm too lazy" or "I'm a lying coward", you don't have any excuses.

Morkie passed HIS General, Lennie, so it means he's either smarter than you or found yet ANOTHER three VE's that needed $50 more than they needed a conscience.

So which is it?

HUGE Snip.

More mindless pontification with which to deceive the weak minded

Nope.

We just keep it out there to remind everyone what a lying dweeb
you are, Lennie.

Or inept...But does it really matter?

Point taken and rightly so. Far be it for Lennie to actually DO what he says he's going to do.

More than you, I bet....Mr Rear Area Radio Mechanic.

You're not really going to re-hash those lies about passing all that traffic are you, Lennie? You got busted and humiliated then, it will happen again. Why suffer. Just let it lay.

Why?

You haven't.

You're not a pilot, let alone a CFI, so if you're "knuckle-spank(ing)" any pilot you're commiting a federal felony by battering the pilot-in-command of a federally licensed aircraft in flight.

You're not qualified to "instruct" ANY person on proper communications techniques.

I'm willing to bet tthat whatever it is, it's more than you...By a looooooooooong stretch.

How about "Nun Of The Above"...?!?!

All of those radios require a federal license to operate other than to just turn on an listen to or admire the blinking lights.

You don't have a federal license that allows you to use any of them in the intended manner.

(BTW: Please don't waste our time with tales of your "professional" licensure...Your GROL is useless for Amateur applications as it does not grant station privileges or authorize a callsign)

No...You don't.

But you have a zoning code which still won't let you erect that Log periodic on your block.

You have to HAVE a license to be stripped of, Lennie.

And if you're using "1930's" procedures, you'll sound like an idiot on 21st century Amateur Radio...Which is pretty much what the rst of us (except Morkie, and Morkie's an idiot) expect from you.

There's no lying here, fatboy.

You told me to 'stop whing". I asked you what "whing" is...

Can you not even read your own spelling, fatboy?

Lessee....I figured the ratio of YOUR typos to mine, Morkie and it came out at over 21,000-to-1.

Now.

WHAT is a "bisexaul", Morkie? It's obviously NOT a "typo" since you keep doing it over and over.

I'm not a stalker.

You, on the otherhand, ARE a proven liar and coward.

What "flier", Morkie? I've already told you that you can send it via snail mail and it will never see the light of USENET...I'm not about to make that statement here so it can be used against me later, fatboy...

So...I say you're a fat liar, and you can't prove me wrong.

That proves you're a fat liar.

See how simple that was...?!?!

Give me quantity. Antenna "theory" has not changed in 50 years, it is a given--a "known" in its present state. We need mind to come up with new ideas, apply newly discovered physics and give us something new to work with.

What do they need to know to grab their rig, coax and antenna off ebay and begin in the amateur bands, oh yeah, and know band limits and modes.

An FCC Commissioner could snap his/her fingers and make an application "happen", but it won't ever happen with YOUR name on it...

"No Code" has been the law of the land for over a week, now.

Any perusal of ULS will show hundreds of people who've taken the test SINCE then are already licensed and have been for days.

Other than "I'm too lazy" or "I'm a lying coward", you don't have any excuses.

Morkie passed HIS General, Lennie, so it means he's either smarter than you or found yet ANOTHER three VE's that needed $50 more than they needed a conscience.

So which is it?

>Steve, K4YZ

Steve,

If you think about what ham radio is all about, try to consider a Mr. Len Anderson attempting to conduct a normal QSO. First he would need to develop a modicum of social skills and be able to discuss a reasonably wide range of relevant topics with people that he never met before. Would Len be an interesting person that people would want to QSO with? His relevant topics are limited to the evils of morse code testing (which is now a moot point anyway) and his sense of humor is making one-liners that are not really funny that involve half-wit jokes about engineering terms such as reactance and susceptance. Len knows that. I think Len is horrified over the prospect of an amateur license because it involves social interactions that he is not prepared to participate in. For Len, an amateur license would just be a useless people of paper and an HF of VHF station would be a worthless investment because it involves two way communication.

Well, if he is really that way, he could stick to doing contests.

If you are speaking about putting control in all 350 million citizens hands (well, those over 18 and citizens of the united states) in some form of vote--ABSOLUTELY!

If you are speaking about putting control in only those hands which possess amateur tickets--ABSOLUTELY NOT!

A gov't agency, responsible to ALL citizens of the US is then the correct means to implement a democratic republic. But then, you already knew that from your HS and college civic classes ...

Letting the fox run the hen house is NOT American!

Yep, FCC should design/implement the exam forms and get the money it costs to print/disperse and implement said exams--the citizens pay for this, naturally, there is no "money tree" which provides money, we the citizens foot EVERY cost of ours, whether someone hides these costs from us or not.

That is American, we pay our own way here.

Several things come to mind here:

Quantity vs quality we hear a lot about. The former is good for publishers and equipment manufacturers and the latter is good for interesting QSO's.

Someone mentioned the importance of ham radio as a service to the community. What makes ham radio so special that it has to be a service to anyone other than those who enjoy it? All such justifications are pure nonsense these days.

It is also frequently said that ham radio is an "old man's hobby". So what! There are plenty of hobbies for children. I for one enjoy getting away from teeny boppers.

I get a great deal of pleasure out of talking to people my age and exchanging experiences and how we got here. I have nothing in common with children. I would be delighted to elmer them but competing with computers, cell phones, drugs and teenage girls is beyond the call of duty.

I welcome them into the community but to go trolling for them is a waste of energy.

People complain about the crowded bands, QRM, rude behavior and yet whine about declining numbers.

Won't it be nice what all that open space on 75 is filled with CB level hams?

Take a civic/"American Government" class. All power comes from the people and "flows" to our representatives, our representatives hire other servants to assist them in carrying out the peoples will, and only by our pleasure and for our well being, safety and needs.

All in government are a bunch of servants who work for us, kinda like maids, butlers, handy men, maintenance people, logistic workers, security, bean counters, etc.

If a few Americans are confused and attempt to worship them as royalty--well, I just don't know how to save the ignorant from themselves ... perhaps a better education will enlighten them?

Remember, our forefathers insisted we bear arms just to bring these guys back into line--least they forget ...

Too many diverse cultures and peoples flowing into this country and having lived under despots, disgusting dictators, communism, common criminals, etc. has diluted our sense of who we are and what heritage we have. This does need to be addressed ...

An FCC Commissioner could snap his/her fingers and make an application "happen", but it won't ever happen with YOUR name on it...

"No Code" has been the law of the land for over a week, now.

Any perusal of ULS will show hundreds of people who've taken the test SINCE then are already licensed and have been for days.

This demonstrates that Len is not up to speed on application handling procedures. The ARRL and the FCC handle NEW applications first, upgrades next, and vanity applications last. This is their operating policy. Afterall some one with an existing license can operate while they wait for the upgrade or vanity call.

New license processing normally takes 5 to 10 days. Upgrades also take 5 to 10 days but are done after processing the new licensees. At the ARRL they are processing faster than normal despite the increased number of forms to go through as they put on extra staff in anticipation of this.

Vanity calls are special processing and are not handled by the VECs (except for renewals). One must apply directly to the FCC and they take 3 weeks or more.

I do hope she doesn't think I am the SAME as Robesin!

The difference is that I DO have documented proof of my military service time...plus a photo essay in public view of what I did during that time...plus a few articles authored for Ham Radio magazine. :-)

But, on the issue of ARRL VEC application processing, their recent web page article did NOT say how many applications were received (in numerical quantities), only that they had received applications from many ARRL VE groups. It is easy to name off the number of ARRL VE teams but the article doesn't say (except for some Carribbean team...55-plus?) how many total or per day.

Heh heh heh heh. Well, think of it this way: He isn't causing ANY RFI or EMI by broadcasting on the Internet... :-)

Is anyone up there knowledgeable about the Aussie OUTbacker antenna line? I'm curious and there has been some mention of them on the Antennex.com website.

Bob, where did I say that I did not want to be here??? I just think its nice to have a place to go, other than here, that each and every

Read it again, Mork. Stop putting words in someone else's mouth again.

Bob, where did I say I did not want to be here? I just indicated that it is nice to have some other place to go and read amateur related threads, besides here, where every thread hasn't been hi-jacked and posted into irrelevance by....well I don't have to say, we all know who.

>yes woger has to have the last word as do you.

If that is the case, why does almost every thead end with you as the last author???? I don't see mine or Woger's name as being the last author on almost each and every thread, but I do see YOU.

I wish someone would stalk you so you would really know what it is to be stalked. In your mind, anyone who does not agree with you taking over and renaming each and every thread is a stalker.

You know, it is a good point. Can you imagine the difficulty and shame that the wife of an admitted "bi" must feel? That must be why she lets the outside appearnce of the house and the yard go hell. Wonder what it looks like inside the house. On the other hand, maybe the XYL is bi too; that could be interesting. Wonder who's on top!

Right in this thread, you were responding to me in my thread and said
">>no it involes prusiiut and threatening all of which are conducted", implying that I am conducting pursuit and threats of/upon you. Which I have never done. I just gave an opinion about the how splended the new moderated group is working out and once again you have managed to try and hi-jack this thread to make it all about you, luckly you can't do that in the moderated group.

But you know how implications work, you posted this:

>>>Bob, where did I say that I did not want to be here???
"by posting this diatrbe of course"

> > I want you to find one post where I have > >threatend you. Mark

>well that is almost a threat right there

Mark it is not a threat. Now if I told you that if you post one more time I am coming to your house in Michigan to stomp the shit out of you, that would be a threat. Just asking you to back up your slanderous statement with proof is not a threat, it simply is a request for you to provide justifcation for you statement.

It's a shame, you don't even know the meaning of the word fraud.

You throw these legal terms around so loosely without even knowing the implications of such terms. Nevertheless, you have really proved my point. You will post again so you can have the last word, you will change the name of this post, and show that once again you can hi-jack

this thread.

It's more of a "control" thing for them. They jerk your chain so that you will reply and then they complain because you replied. They are just trolling and the best thing to do to trolls is to ignore them. However, that being said, I'm not in your shoes so I won't pass judgment on your replies. They aren't hard to pass over without reading and don't really bother me at all.

I find most of the posts here just state you are bisexual, now, either you are or you are not.

Now, although I have "been around the world" a lot, and I am certainly NO angel--I FIND HOMOSEXUALS ABOMINATIONS! And, homosexuals disgust me to the point I could vomit when graphic details are depicted. And, I make no difference between bisexuals and homosexuals. To find a difference, you would first have to really make a big difference between murders who love their mothers, and murders who don't. By this, I am pointing out, you either are, or you are NOT! I think you are, if I am not wrong, you have stated so yourself.

Now, I realize that to YOU, being a guy who has sex with a man and a woman looks different that a man who only bung holes guys--I am sorry, that difference is so small as to be unmentionable in importance to me, somehow I greatly suspect it is like that for the MAJORITY of people.

You could greatly please me if you left out ALL reference to your sexuality out of amateur groups. I don't care about it in regards to the communications here and it certainly is WAY OFF TOPIC FOR ANY AMATEUR NEWSGROUP--and it GREATLY make me feel ill ...

Shut up about your filthy sex ... move on man ... I think you are just sneaky and get off it disgusting others with perverted sex.

MOVE ON MAN!

Anyone else want to add a guess?

1) Predict amount of change in ARS numbers between the IMPLEMENTATION date of the R&O for elimination of code testing and one year from that date.
2) Calculation of the number of licenses will be done by N2EY under the same principals that he uses now to calculate the number of licenses.
3) You must select whole numbers for your percentage.
4) You may select positive or negative percentages.
5) You may select a range but that range may not exceed a total of 4%. Note that your average will be used to determine who is closest. If the actual change is outside the range of everyone's guesses then the person whose limit is closest will be the winner.
6) You must submit your guess no later than six months after the IMPLEMENTATION date of the R&O.

Anyone else? Note if your guess doesn't show up on the list within a week, it may mean that my ISP is blocking it or that you are on my blocked senders list. You may still participate but you will have to have your guess submitted by someone who is not blocked.

Guesses submitted:
N8UZE: 1% less to 1% more
N2EY: 1% more to 2% more
KH6HZ: 1% less to 0% change
N3KIP: 2% more to 6% more
KH6O: 6% more to 10% more
KK6J: 12% more to 14% more
KC2HMZ: 5% more
K8BSG: 2% to 3% more <--- Added 02/18/06

318. A "Codeless Revolution?"

Source record: 185323

SOME OBSERVATIONS ABOUT THE CODELESS "REVOLUTION"

Based solely on www.hamdata.com published statistics from 22 February to 3 March 2007, there doesn't seem to be the kind of "revolution" nor the influx of CB hordes expected by the long-timers. Specifically, the table below uses the small block of daily statistics that appears to the left of the license class totals. Since the data of the data is derived from FCC database files, the numberic values represent daily quantities from FCC actions the day before:

NEW	EXPIRED	UPDATES	CALL CHG.	CLASS CHG
22 Feb, Thu.	174	172	894	49 88
23 Feb, Fri.	78	83	432	5 44
24 Feb, Sat.	190	127	494	47 121
25 Feb, Sun.	1	95	195	20 13
26 Feb, Mon.	0	0	58	0 0
27 Feb, Tue.	144	2	700	13 347
28 Feb, Wed.	99	168	846	44 89
1 Mar, Thu.	138	203	783	13 369
2 Mar, Fri.	87	204	729	12 346
3 Mar, Sat.	85	168	724	83 270

NEW = Never before licensed or retest after long absence
EXPIRED = Past the two-year grace period
UPDATES = Renewals, address changes, adminstrative changes, not 'upgrades' to another class
CALL CHG = Changed call sign of existing license
CLASS CHG = Changed class of license (mostly 'upgrades')

Numbers for 25 and 26 Feb idicate the weekend off for FCC; Expirations would probably be automatic as a result of computer check of pre-determined grace period end. The Updates column may be a result of more automation from renewals received and thus might be due to just computer activity automatically changing the licensing dates.

Tuesday the 27th probably indicates the beginning of the "deluge" of VEC input that arrived on the Monday before.
The sudden jump in Class Changes is no doubt from existing "lower" class Techs or Tech Plusses moving up to General.
What is interesting is that there don't seem to be ANY significant change of NEW licensees' daily numbers. Those have overwhelmingly come from unlicensed entering the Tech class and have been at a constant increase since Tech was created in 1991. The totals of Technician class HAVE started to drop since the 23rd of February and continue to decrease slowly; it is very certain that class' licensees have upgraded to General or Extra now that there is no code test requirement.

Whatever, it seems clear at a week after 06-178 became legal that there isn't much of any influx of newcomers.

In the last 12 months www.hamdata.com reports that 22,609 NEW licensees entered. In the same period, 29,096 licenses EXPIRED. Licensee grand total dropped by 6,487 in that past period. A good thing or bad one?

Miccolis hasn't explained HOW he got the data. The "same principles" as NOTHING would be the thing. Does he do a download of the publicly-available 80+ MB daily database file from the FCC? What are his totalization conditionals for deriving his class totals? What kind of computer program does he use to search and sort 700K+ data entries?

There IS data from a number of websites doing that such as www.nm7d.org and www.hamdata.com and hamcall.net.
Even the ARRL supplies totals albeit in an indirect way!

For contests a disinterest third-party source of figures is better as a reference.

Mark needs see no actual threats to make such an accusation. All he needs, in his twisted mind, is the perception of a threat even where none exist.

See? I TOLD you Mark's twisted mind is producing twisted logic. What is "almost" a threat, Mark?

That sounded like simple challenge to prove your allegations from the person you falsely accused. You should stop slandering others forthwith.

Not being an amateur licensee NOR a voting member of the ARRL may be at fault...however I've been licensed as a Commercial radio operator for 51 years. In that time there were a LOT of changes of "procedure." The privatization of operator testing was a major change some two decades (give or take) ago...BOTH for amateur and professional license testing.

Is "knowledge of application handling" an IMPORTANT bit of amateur radio operator knowledge? I don't think so. The NCVEC doesn't think so.

Is it? :-) I'm not going to rush to the FCC website to check
that
and I don't care to dispute the League on what they say...

NOT LEGALLY if their "existing license" is IN their grace period.
Hasn't N2EY reminded you yet? :-)

> New license processing normally takes 5 to 10 days.

According to an ARRL VEC VE team leader, N6ZZK, it takes 10 to 15 days. I've talked to Ted and shaken hands with him, am I to believe you over him?

> Upgrades also take 5 to > 10 days but are done after processing the new licensees.

That depends on surface mail delivery from VE teams to the ARRL VEC in Newington, CT. East coasties will get their mail there the first (usually). West coasties (in CONUS) get there next to last; Alaska and Hawaii are nearly last but the island possessions in the Pacific WILL be last on delivering ARRL VEC paperwork to Newington.

> At the ARRL they

Just so terribly wonderful, ain't it? :-)

I haven't seen any photos at the ARRL website that show sweaty workers spending all kinds of hours a day, no one with dark circles under their eyes from all that "overtime."

> Vanity calls are special processing and are not handled by the VECs (except Tsk, tsk. You forgot to mention that you can't get a Vanity call UNLESS you already have a legal operator license. Rather important thing to remember, that...

That, sir, is a bold-faced lie. When Steve posts forty, fifty, sixty or more times a day, then cast stones.
Have you counted YOUR posts today alone? Yet, nary a single one from Steve,

Well, I see it as people are no longer interested in Ham Radio. The internet is here. People hang out at boards like Nim Busters and do talk shows these days...

Well, this data also puts them extra-class blow hards at ease. We dont them all having heart attacks and becoming silent keys.... Lest we have less hams then...

He sired a 'defective' daughter? You are indeed a fucking goon, Mark. Who are YOU to say that his daughter was worthless, in the womb or out? You have no right to pass judgment. It is obvious that Steve is far more moral than you, in that he does not practice abortion as you suggest he should have. What gives YOU the right to pass your mind-twisted judgment upon others? The synapses in your brain are misfiring again.
No human is "worthless", not even you...though you are pushing the envelope on this one.
Steve very much loved his daughter, something I'm sure you cannot comprehend since you will never sire children by engaging in anal sex with men.
By your reasoning, it follows that your mother should also have terminated you when you were but an embryo. After all, you are a mentally defective dyslexic and admit that you are partially disabled so, by extension, your existence in the womb was worthless, too.
As said earlier, I pity you. And like the morally bereft dolt you are, you cannot begin to understand why.
You've proved once again that you are indeed a bottom-feeder, pun intended.
<spit>

(I'm always surprised when this word is misspelled. The irony is just too much. Whenever one says something like, "in all existance," how much does one actually know about existence after spelling it existance?)

no I would argue that it proves he is IMORAL in the extreme in this case as his daughteer clearly is good case for why abortion should be legal and safe

You edited out the challenge I posted whereby I asked you to post in English.
There is no "almost a threat", except in your jaded, twisted dyslexic mind.
Either a threat has been made, or none has.

To put it in a perspective that you can comprehend. He "almost" stuck his penis in your butt is not the same as he DID stick his penis in your butt.
It either happened, or did not happen.

Your twisted logic again rears its ugly head.

His beloved daughter was an innocent soul. She could not defend herself.
I am not passing judgment. I am merely expressing my observations based upon your comments.

Dittos for your mother! She should have aborted you, too. Was she immoral?

You, by your own admissions and posts can hardly depict my comments as being inaccurate.

Not at all. Just an honest look at the facts as presented by you.

Ah! A classic case of the pot calling the kettle black. Good try, Mark, but it doesn't fly. YOU can pass judgement, but when others take you to task, it is a different story.
Again, I passed no judgement. I merely stated facts that pertain directly to you. Don't like it? Too bad.

Read the comment again. Nowhere was eating shit mentioned. You obviously Isn't this always the case with Morkie?

When others form a moderated newsgroup, it is "censorship".
When Morkie forms a moderated blog, it isn't "censorship".

Morkie is a walking double-standard.

Anyone who posts a message containing any statement that refutes or otherwise disagrees with anything Mork posts automatically classifies that person as a "stalker".

(gotta wonder how you can 'stalk' someone in a public internet message forum, but, that's a different issue)

Just part of Morkie's "professional victim" mentality.

Mark's mind works in odd, twisted ways that neither you or I wlll ever understand.
No matter what we may say, Mark will "read" his own interpretation into our words and then, as always, put words in our mouths where none existed. Yet, despite twisting our comments to suit his ends, he demands WE prove our statements while accusing us of "stlaking".
Yes, a clear double standard is at play here.

Note, too, that he is never far from mentioning Steve in his dozens of posts. When Steve takes Mark to task and chides Mark, Steve is accused of "stalking". But, comma, when Mark mentions Steve's name in post after post after post, that is NOT stalking, but Mark defending what he percieves to be his "honor".
Mark has yet to realize that he has no "honor", at least not in the eyes of most of the Usenet visitors. For him to think otherwise is delusional.
I'm sure Mark will now read this comment and attempt to hijack the thread.
Mark (no pun intended) my words.

I'd prefer to give Mark no benefit of the doubt. The guy is an almost admitted misfit. Yes, Mark, you "almost" admitted to being a misfit just as a previous poster "almost" made a threat. I'm simply using your loose definitions.
In actuality, Mark IS a misfit. How else can one explain away the web sites and blogs that he has been blocked from? Something is very, very wrong with Mark.

I doubt Mark knows much about the Playboy magazine in general. I suspect he is far more familiar with GayBoy.

Yes! Your mother should have asked the local witch doctor to shove a coat hanger up her vagina and scrape you out. Unfortunately, that did not happen.

Just look at you. That is explanation enough. You should have been coat-hangered during the first trimester.

Just as you, "ahem" are defective, Mark. Your judgment is as flawed as the rest of your worn-out arguments. Your mom should have made your father use a condom, but it is too late for that now, isn't it?

Eventually, they'll all be Extras and my wish for a one class amateur radio service will be fulfilled. We should change the name of that license to: Amateur.

There will ultimately be two classes of ham radio license.

Tech, and Extra.

Or Class A and Class B. A VHF+ entry-level license, and a license with all privileges.

Just as I suggested in my Y2K NPRM restructuring comments, I might add.

While I agree that a significant percentage will go on to Extra, I also think that there will be a noticeable percentage who will stay at General.
Unless you are into contesting or DXing, there is not a lot of advantage to getting an Extra.

I disagree. My bet is that we'll indeed have a de facto two level license system but I think they will be General and Extra. The step from Tech to General is not that difficult and the licensee will have access to all modes, power levels and bands. Unless you are into DXing, contesting or being a VE, the additional privileges that Extra licensees have are not that much of an advantage.

I, for one, encourage all those studying for Technician to go ahead and get the General study guide and go for it either at the first sitting or as soon as possible thereafter. The Technician will be basically turn into a very temporary way station on their climb up the ladder.

In my opinion, the Technicians who stay at that level will primarily be those who are inactive.

Dee, as a Technician (from Novice), I enjoyed DXing and Contesting on 10M SSB. Lots of fun.

I've been on record for a long, long time advocating a one license "system." However, I've compromised with Hans suggestion of a simple entry level license, and a full license. Whover said we needed more license classes ought to have his head examined.

Yup, 10 meters is a fun band. However as a Tech, you only get part of it.
While there can certainly be a lot of DX in the Tech portion, I've seen it full from top to bottom with DX during a contest if the band is open. You could have even more fun if you upgrade.

When the band has been really open, I've enjoyed working up at the top end where FM is allowed.

However, my comment was addressing the avid, heavy duty DXer/contester. For the casual operator, the General usually conveys a wide enough range of spectrum.

You might want to go look at the newsgroup comp.software.year-2000 before you talk about that process too much. It was formed around 1997 to discuss software issues with the rollover from 1999 to 2000.
Last time I looked, that was a few years ago.

Of course that ng is in the Big 8 hierarchy also.

Well it's hard to say what the right number of classes is. I would advocate two licenses: a 50 question General exam and a 50 question Extra exam. The material in the Tech & General tests has enough overlap and is basic enough that it would not be a big hardship on applicants to master the combined material. Going straight from a Tech or other entry level test to Extra is a huge jump in both quantity and complexity of the material. It would certainly discourage a lot of people and might increase the drop out rate.

Already our club is planning for future licensing classes to combine these two. Of course, we'll have to create our own syllabus and figure out how best to present the combined material. At this point in time, there are no combined manuals that already address the material for both license classes. In principle it would be similar to the Now You're Talking book that was available prior to the 2000 changes, which combined the Novice and Technician material in one integrated study guide such that a person could study for both Novice and Tech writtens at the same time. Our goal will be to not only help them get licensed, but to try for General right out of the box.

As I see it, there simply is no longer a need for an "entry level" license.

ARRL Seeks Comments on New HF Digital Protocol
NEWINGTON, CT, Feb 22, 2007 -- The ARRL is seeking comments from amateurs concerning development of an open-source (non-proprietary) data communications protocol suitable for use by radio amateurs over high-frequency (HF) fading paths. This is not a Request for Proposals (RFP). An RFP may or not be forthcoming depending on evaluation of the information received.

Specifically, the League is asking for comments and information on the following issues:

Access Method: Is Orthogonal Frequency-Division Multiplexing (OFDM) the best candidate technology, or should other competitive technologies be considered?

Data Rate and Bandwidth: What data rates/throughputs are achievable at various bandwidths up to 3 kHz bandwidth?

Adaptivity: What adaptive features should be considered, such as automatic adjustment of transmitter power, modulation waveform and coding, in order to maximize throughput and efficiency in two-way contacts?

Robustness: What is achievable for reliable operation at power levels typical in the Amateur Radio Service and low signal/noise and interference ratios?

Error control: What are the appropriate applications of error control suitable for HF channels? For example, how should Repeat reQuest (ARQ) and Forward Error Control (FEC) be applied to two-way contacts and one-to-many (roundtable and bulletin) transmissions?

Activity Detection: What is an effective method of determining whether a frequency is busy prior to transmission?

Operating System: What operating systems (such as Windows or Linux) are appropriate for Amateur Radio use with this protocol?

Hardware: What practical and affordable hardware platforms are suitable for amateur stations? Consider the use of personal computers with or without sound cards. Provide any information about the need for an additional "box" if needed.

Please provide the following with your response: (1) name of respondent, (2) respondent's contact information, (3) related experience, and (4) type of respondent: (individual, partnership, corporation or group). Do not include proprietary information as part of your response.

Post, fax or e-mail your response by 1900 UTC, May 15, 2007, to ARRL Chief Technology Officer Paul Rinaldo, W4RI, 3545 Chain Bridge Rd -- Suite 209, Fairfax, VA 22030; Fax: 703-934-2079.

I disagree. The "top" license, Amateur, should be the current General exam, and the entry level license, Limited Amateur, should be something much less.

I've never bothered with FM on 10.

So if the amateur radio service was comprised of only 10 meteres, there could be no avid, heavy duty DXing and Contesting?

I think there could be.

All of amateur radio is fine for the casual operator.

My goodness, now they attempt to jump into the present millennium!

Well, at least they have a starting point. Strange though, all they have to do is look where 56K modem technology dropped off when HS came about and 90% of their work is done. Not to mention just duping the HS technology.

Ogg Vorbis is an example of sound compression/encoding technology which matches or exceeds the quality of MP3's and it is NON-proprietary.

Linux or windows is suitable as the OS, but Linux is free ...

What I don't like is the arrl immediately jocking for front position in the development of the technology. Let the little amateurs who are capable develop the technology. If you listen up at a VHF and beyond, you will already see that some didn't wait and such voice packet communications go on--WITHOUT the arrl.

I believe the CRC32 cyclic redundancy check is still used and is proved and non-proprietary.

I've not heard of the OUTbacker until you mentioned it. A quick check of the local ham radio stores (www.radioworld.ca and www.durhamradio.com) showed no listing for this manufacturer, so there probably aren't a lot of them installed up here.

Sorry, can't add to the knowledge base on this one - I'll ask around,

Not at all. There is such a wide range of enjoyable activities available that I want people to be able to explore them. For the same reason (expanding one's range of activities and knowledge base), I've dragged Extra class licensees over to the VHF station at Field day to show them what can be achieved on those frequencies. While there are many Extras familiar with the VHF/UHF possibilities, for some reason the Extras in the club I belong to it have not really explored them.

With the dropping of the code test requirement, the difference between the Tech license material and the General license material is just not that great. In the exam sessions, we actively encourage a person to try the General when they pass the Tech exam. Those applicants that have chosen to develop an understanding of the Tech material (i.e. learn the antenna equation and how to use it rather than memorizing the lengths for the questions that might occur on the test) usually come within a couple of points of passing the General. Some would have passed the General if they had simply known to also memorize the General frequency priviliges along with the material they already knew.

The material on the Tech and General is straight forward enough that it can be grasped by just about anyone with a moderate amount of study. If one looks at it in terms of return (license & range of privileges) versus investment (study), the General is perfectly reasonable as a first license step.

On the other hand, let's look at an "entry level" license and exam. You have got to cover rules, safety (including RF radiation safety), and good operating practices as a bare minimum. By the time you do this, you've already got a significant portion of what you would need for a General class license. Your return (license & privileges) versus investment (study) for an entry level license, is just not that worthwhile.

Those countries that have folded their two license classes into one class often had a written test that was equivalent to our Extra not our General for both and the only differentiating item was the code test. Thus they really had no "entry" license. They had VHF/UHF licenses and full licenses. The US has been somewhat unusual in that there is a license (General) that has a significant range of privileges on all bands with a moderate level level of testing.

Ok then, let's do the same as some typical European countries. Only one license class and every one takes the equivalent of the Extra class written exam. Prior to the no code change, they did not have entry level licenses. All licenses took the same written (basically equivalent to our Extra written) and those who passed code got everything while those who didn't were VHF/UHF only. When the code was dropped, they folded the two groups into one. No need to haul out the many variations that existed. While some countries did have an entry license with a simpler written there were others who didn't. In some countries, you had to take formal classes and you were not allowed to take the test if you had just studied on your own.

Thanks for pasting the link, JS, you beat me by an hour...:-)

Outbacker NA is based in Kentucky and seems to carry all the Aussie verticals of that brand. I'm considering that sort of multi-band antenna for a home station...not that it matters
a great deal here since the paths north to east require NVIS type sky-burning. Mobile will probably be 6m-2m-70cm in a triband whip (probably Diamond) with a Diamond motorized hatchback-lip mount that allows lowering it inside the garage. "Stealth antenna" sort of thing...:-) Haven't heard a lot about them "furrin ay-tennas" (like Australia is a "foreign land?") fur dem pickups in da woods of Kain-tuckie. Over on www.antennex they've been described in much detail by Aussie amateurs who thought much of them in Aussie-land outback territory.

A curiosity is how to get an effective ground plane for a home installation that does NOT involve sticking a lot of radials into the ground. Sprinkler pipe is all PVC so that will not do. There's no NEC version modeling program that can simulate the row of tall cypresses where the intended location of a vertical would be (in between two of the spaced cypresses). [just planning ahead...]

No sweat on a VHF-UHF home antenna...enough vent pipes (metal) to mount them on. For "stealth" I can do the Ventenna thing and cover the vertical VHF-UHF with PVC pipe of large diameter.

Outbackers are listed in the HRO catalog but the Burbank, CA, HRO outlet didn't have any for show-and-tell on Friday.
Again, the folks working there (all 2 of them) didn't have any technical info on that line. Three guys were in front of the new-radio long desk busy doing some kind of "knowledgeable" arguing a la RRAP style and I didn't care for more of that at 2:30 PM on a Friday afternoon. :-)

Also, it should be easily compilable by some free compiler available for

This would guarantee that rich or poor alike have equal access to the

The free borland command line tools is one excellent example of a free

An ENTRY level license NAME loaded with denigrating adjectives is not a good way to attract anyone. Using "novice" or "beginner" or "apprentice" or "tyro" or "newbie" MIGHT attract a younger teener but is a turn-off to most anyone over 18. "Limited" might be an "accurate" adjective but it is still emotionally-loaded as a descriptor.

Even a "tyro" marketing person would have tossed the "Novice" name in the trash long ago. :-(

If anything, just call the entry class for Entry class...

Once upon a time in hamland there was NO "entry level"
by name. One simply jumped in and did it, "learning"
the (oh so) PROPER procedure as they went along.

> As I suspected, and Len asserted, "It's all about Morse Code" with > some of you's guys.

Morsemanship skills could have used an on-air learning period for many. It was never an intellectual skill but a psychomotor thing that some had trouble with despite some saying "oh, no trouble at all for 'me'." :-(

If any ham club wants to have specialized classes on morsemanship skills, that's fine with me. Those interested in that can do the classroom thing all they want, then try it out for real with their radios later. That's the SAME way one learns theory in classroom environments, then tries it out on real radio hardware later.

Trying to combine classroom with on-air training by frequency-restricted, limited privilege license classes (and the attendant class-distinction) was never a good thing in my mind.

Sorry, but I disagree totally with the "not a lot of advantage to getting an Extra." Sum it up with the two words: CLASS DISTINCTION...or perhaps just one word: STATUS.

"Status" in a hobby activity? Do you want the "Slow Code" military obediance of "saluting Extras" by all "lesser" classes? To have the "lesser" classes sit on the floor at meetings to "put them in their place?" Sorry, but that is NOT the way to any "happiness" and "good fellowship"
in a hobby activity done for personal pleasure.

The military is IN the business of DESTRUCTION at the very real fact of part of the military being destroyed in the process of doing "defense." There is NO real counterpart in amateur radio, never was. So I would strongly urge that ALL classes and "leadership" refrain from putting newbies, tyros, novices, etc.
constantly "in their place" and just guiding or showing them how it is done. Most just starting out in radio are PEOPLE, even the teeners, and they will not like being "put in their place" by some officious type who have (essentially) elevated themselves to positions of what they think are "important."

JS, you've overlooked some of the regulatory-political aspects.
This isn't about the ARRL "jockeying for position in leadership" but a potential REGULATION CHANGE of Part 97.

This isn't about "freedom" (or neo-anarchy as you seem to want) but a very real pumping for MODE CHANGE (going for higher rates) in REGULATIONS. There's the real POLITICAL issue of allowing radio amateurs too much freedom and possibly "using means to obscure the content of communications" (more or less) as given in ITU radio regulation S25. The USA is a signatory to the ITU and takes that seriously. It should.

LIke it or not, the ARRL does have some POLITICAL clout. It has a DC law firm on retainer plus a lobbyist business. While we both have expressed misgivings about the ARRL they still have an effect on Regulation Changes. The League is a NAME even though it is small compared to hundreds of other, bigger special-interest groups in the DC area. That's where the law of the land is run.

If you want to pump up Linux and Freeware, fine, go ahead. I can't agree with you despite your longer experience with software. I can't agree with academic types who put "freedom" ahead of commercial interests because they think they are "better" than crass capitalists. <shrug> That's just the usual lot of hooey

which is disguised self-defined, self-centered "better-than-othersism."

One BIG proposal by a Name group that has both researchable technical smarts and proper Legalese language is going to do more and has a better chance of passing the FCC's scrutiny on mode advancement than any retreaded 60s-style rhetoric. The FCC has more smarts there than all the "me-firsters" think and they have a LARGE task in managing ALL civil radio in the USA. FCC R&Os show that they DO think about things from their lawful regulation role. It may not be what YOU like in their decisions but it IS a decision coupled with all the reasons of that decision.

The ARRL hasn't submitted that proposal yet. That's why they put that notice out...they are gathering material to put into a Petition for Consideration. I will side with the ARRL's effort on improving the technical side of US amateur radio regulations. It is a good sign of their (finally) leaving the old 1930s style of hamming behind. Don't knock it.

Steve,

Who is "we"?

I was simply reminding you that it has been more than 7 years since Len wrote that he was "going for Extra right out of the box." He also wrote a few months back that he could pass the Extra with or without a Morse Code test, but he never made good on that boast.

Also, what is the point of calling someone names like "lying dweeb" and "Lennie"? All it does is bring you down to their level of childish behavior.

>   Or inept...But does it really matter?

Len has since written that his "Extra right out of the box" statement was merely a "throwaway comment" and was "taken out of context".

Well, there you have it. Why call someone a liar
if they can prove you wrong by their own actions?

Maybe. Anyone with sense knows that.

Well, let's see......

In the 1930s, radio amateurs were using Morse Code, AM voice, and SSB voice modes, plus some forms of radio control of model aircraft. They were using MF, HF, and VHF. All of that still goes on today.

Actually, Steve, you don't know that.

One of the most common TV antennas is a log periodic. With some modification, one could be used for VHF/UHF amateur radio communication.

Not that I'm recommending it, but it could be done.

What's with the namecalling, Steve?

The products named could possibly be used. Recall too that Len has referred to an alleged "northern house" which is not the Lanark Street address. Perhaps the "northern house" has more land around it.

All depends what sort of LP is meant.

btw, "CC&R" means "Codes, Covenants and Restrictions".
It's a pretty safe bet that there are detailed building codes for Len's Lanark Street property, and that putting up a tower requires a building permit at the very least. There may also be maximum height regulations, etc.

There's also the fact that the antenna must not extend over adjacent properties without permission of the owners.

What is this fascination with the "1930s", anyway?

If something works well, why change it?

I am told that in the 1930s, people answered the telephone
"Hello", same as today. Hams in those days called CQ, gave their own callsigns last when calling, used Q signals, RST, etc. - same as today. The common "QWERTY" keyboard arrangement of 2007 was in common use in the 1930s on mechanical typewriters and teleprinters.

So in many ways, we are all still using "1930s" procedures today. Nothing wrong with that, either.

> > >Vanity call?

Actually, N2EY and K8MN are not vanity callsigns. K4YZ and WK3C are vanity callsigns.

If someone looks up a callsign on qrz.com, then requests
'detailed information', the FCC database codes are displayed. The codes tell things like which radio service the call is assigned to, type of station (club, individual, etc.)
and whether the call is a vanity call or not.

N2EY is not a vanity call. Neither is K8MN. Both were sequentially issued decades ago.

> > >Think about it.

>   Eight Days...No Lennie...No surprises there.................

Is that the best way to greet a possible newcomer, Steve?

It's clear that the rules change has resulted in a lot of applications, which increases the processing time.

It's way too early to see long-term trends based on short-term results. That's just common sense.

For example, back on Feb 22, 2007, the last day before the rules changes, there were 654,680 current unexpired
FCC-issued amateur radio licenses held by individuals.
Of those, 324,326 (49.54%) were Technician or Tech Plus class licenses (293,508 and 30,818, respectively).

As of March 3, 2007, yesterday, there were 654,551
current unexpired FCC-issued amateur radio licenses held by individuals. That's a decrease of 129.

Of those 654,551 hams on March 3, 323,026 (49.35%) were Technician or
Tech Plus class licenses (292,598 and 30,428, respectively).

Does that mean the changes have failed to cause growth?
I don't think so - I think it's simply too early to tell.

Whether Len is part of that or not really isn't clear
yet. Perhaps he is, perhaps he's not, and simply trying to get a reaction.

Len has already admitted that he puts intentional errors in his postings in order to get a response.

Do you really want Len to get an amateur license,
Steve?

Yes your right, it is time for YOU to move along and take your Riff-Raff, such as Mark Morgan with you. I bet if Mark did not post here, hijack every thread, and turn every subject into an opportunity to satisfy his desperate plea for attention, the group would calm down. But Mark has irritated so many, for so long, with his constant cross posting and hijacking of every thread. I don't know where he gets off thinking he can hijack every thread knowing that it is inappropriate. Imagine your at a amateur radio club meeting sitting at a table talking among several members, and then Mark sits down rudely butts into your conversation (thread) and starts talking about something way off topic. So you get up go to another table and start another converstation and here comes Mark again butting into your conversation (thread) and once again he changes the topic. So you tell Mark, I don't want you butting into my conversation and changing the topic, then he turns it all around and accuses you of stalking him. You would probably think he is mental. So you get up move once again, start another conversation, and here comes Mark again, and again, and again, you can't escape this asshole if you want to use the NG. My question is when was this group every peaceful, in 1996 or 97 perhaps? Most of you who are whining on Mark's side wasn't even posting here then, so you don't even know what the group was like BMC (before Mark Morgan)? Most people that were on this group before Mark showed up don't want to deal with or talk to Mark Morgan because of his behavior and he has very little knowledge and can't really add anything to the conversation, but he won't go away, and he insists on hijacking every thread. He thinks just because he obtained a ham license he somehow gained some special right to hijack practically every thread on the NG. If you don't want me and others like me posting here that are critical of Mark, then stop Mark Morgan from post 300 times a day, changing the names of threads that he didn't start, and hijacking everythread. Mark seems to think he is the first to act this way, but LLoyd Davies was here pulling his garbage way before Mark even thought about amateur radio. Now Mark will say "I have a right to post", which he does, but he dosen't have the right to hijack threads and change the topic to suit him, on threads he did not even start. That's just rude, but typical Mark Morgan behavior. If this was a physical world, somebody probably would have already slapped the shit out of Mark by now and stopped him, but because it is not, he acts accordingly. That's why I say, thank god for the Moderated Group an area free of Mark Morgan.

You thank God for it, but here you are aren't you? However, I promise you that, if you go to the moderated group that you are so happy to have, you will never see a single post from me there.

It should make you happy, but since you advocate people shifting nyms constantly and posting what could only be considered personal attacks, it won't satisfy you. You will still be right here cheering them on if you aren't participating yourself.

During my tenure here, I have never seen Steve make any such threats.

If you can provide me with facts to support your contention otherwise, then I'll withdraw my statement.

You may believe that an anonymous poster is Steve making threats, but you have no proof it is him one way or the other.

Frankly, given the degree to which you fly off the handle, I wouldn't doubt it if there were dozens of people posting messages simply to provoke you into a reaction. They seem to do a good job too. In the first 2 months of 2007, you're responsibile for 850 postings to RRAP on this email address alone, according to the Google Groups "poster profile".

Bob, I don't care whether you want to post or not post to the moderated group, or where you post or what you post. The sad fact is that a moderated group was necessary because of the situation on here and misc, which is directly related to Mark Morgan's behavior. You are somehow under the misconception that you actually matter or my recent post was related to you. When in fact, to the relevance of the issue that I noted when I started this thread, you are irrelevent.

In your opinion you have noted that I advocate people shifting nyms.
Yet, here your are defending someone who does exactly that, who posts on here under no less than three different names. Yet, I only have one and only one name that I post under.

You also indicate that I advocate constant posting of what could only be considered personal attacks. I don't control what others post and I don't advocate anything because I am not an advocate. The posts that I and others author that are critical of Mark is not a planned or coordinated effort by a group. Yet so many individuals who have no contact outside of this news group all perceive a problem and conclude individually that there is only one person who is the common catalyst, Mark Morgan. If you don't like my posts, then don't read them, but unfortunatly I cannot do the same, because on this group it is almost impossible to read a thread that hasn't been hijacked by Mark Morgan.

Neither can you attempt to deny scarfing up a dozen extra "club" calls and conning the FCC into giving you a Hawaiian Vanity call when your residence was in Rhode Island. Try not to deny the obvious.

Appreciate your "Hawaiian" callsign even though you now live in another northeast US state.

> During my tenure here, I have never seen Steve make any such threats.

"Tenure?" You took a very lonnnng "leave of absence" and obviously haven't kept up with output from the US military fake.

> If you can provide me with facts to support your contention otherwise, then > I'll withdraw my statement.

Quit trying to con everyone still on the "okay-ness" of getting those fake club calls. Accept the fact that you DID con the FCC and your Hawaiian associate even admitted to "loaning" you his P.O. Box for an "address."

Since I'm not contemplating any "big russkie linears" or even US-made (or branded) on HF, not a problem here.

However, "BIG" to me is about 10 to 40 KW RF Output.
That is not allowed in US amateur radio regulations. It is also beyond the RF Exposure limits for us urban city dwellers. Now, not all my neighbors aren't the best of folks but I ain't wanting to create crispy critters next door...

LMGDAO. Copyright law?

Free clue: you're posting in a PUBLIC forum. Hence, your comments are PUBLIC domain, just the same as if you were in a football stadium talking to your friend next to you.

Also, you may want to brush up on the concept of "Fair Use Doctrine".

As things are now, I could take every posting you ever made to RRAP, put them up on a web site dedicated to making fun of you, and there wouldn't be a thing you could do about it.

> just posted it in a thread just for you

You posted a link to a blog site which contains links to google groups. I expanded each comment made by Steve on one of the links and didnt see any comment from Steve indicating anything along the lines you attribute to him.

Perhaps you'd like to post a URL to an individual message posted by Steve?

You sure had to do some twisting to see any threats. However, your delusional claims "in case of my demise" on your blog are an sure indication

Sorry, JS, they are good with the usual marketing tricks and wordsmithing, but I know exactly how they do it.

In order to SURVIVE in the getting-more-competitive with fewer amateur radio buyers, they MUST keep that big publishing house going. To do that they have to resort to actually (gasp!) "walk on the wild side" with the majority opinions...not the minority of the code-tested olde-tymers. The ARRL isn't stupid OR despotic.
Signs of tyranical conduct once in a while, though...

Obviously the "control" part has been there for decades.

But on the "product" I disagree with you. However, everyone's "mileage may vary."

Well, I think what you are looking at is their "escape" into the software publishing arena, only they want others to do the hard work (coding) for 'em, then they steal the stuff and sell it.

But, we'll see, we'll see ...

My fiftieth of a dollar:

There are really two issues here.

The first is "what's the best possible license structure?" and the second is "what can we realistically put in place in US amateur radio?"

The first step in answering either question is to define what should be on the tests for a license that gives all US amateur radio privileges. Some think the testing for the current full-privileges US amateur radio license isn't near as comprehensive as it should be, others think it covers too much, etc.

The answer is almost certainly going to be a compromise between all those opinions.

The second step is to determine whether it's a good idea to require a new amateur to pass that test just to get started in amateur radio, or whether it's better to have license classes that require less knowledge in return for fewer privileges.

Then decide how many steps are needed from
"not a ham" to "full privileges".

While doing this, it is important to remember that what appears easy to someone with significant radio/electronics/engineering/math

background may not appear easy to someone who does not have that same background.

Then there's the whole question of what FCC can be induced to do. In recent R&Os and other writings, FCC has repeatedly said they consider the optimum number of license classes to be three.

So it seems the way to go is:

- an "entry level" license that is easy to get and gives limited privileges

- a "middle level" license that requires more knowledge, but not everything

- a "full privileges" license that has comprehensive knowledge requirements for full privileges

That's close to what we have now, but there are improvements that can be made. First is the extreme unbalance in the privileges of the Technician license. That may be a hard sell to FCC.

It should be remembered that the old Novice class was extremely successful in getting new hams started in amateur radio, at least for the first 30-40 or so years of its existence. The main feature of the old Novice that worked so well was that it required minimal testing, so that newcomers could get on the air and see if amateur radio was really for them.

There was never any requirement for newcomers
to start with the Novice, yet for decades most new hams did just that.

What's needed now is a "Novice license for the 21st Century", IMHO

Reminds me of the story of the guy in NY or there'bouts, took a high powered microwave, cut and built a horn antenna out the door and aimed it into the neighbors apt. (obviously, he didn't like the neighbors.) The neighbors were afflicted with all sorts of strange medical problems--until he was caught.

I was referrign to Code Testing.

> With the dropping of the code test requirement, the difference between the

I want you to always remember that you said that. Always.

First, if there is so little difference between the Technician Exam and the General Exam (sans Morse Code), then you make my point that the Technician exam is just too advanced for an entry level exam. It must be simplified.

Second, it was the General Exam that once conveyed ALL AMATEUR PRIVELEGES. Now you are saying that it is the defacto starting point because there is no Morse Exam to accompany it? That just smacks of Code Tested Extra elitism.

Third, the Advanced and Extra Exams have been combined, thereby dumbing down the Extra, bringing it closer to the present General Exam, not pushing it toward an MSEE like some of you would like to think. So if there is so little difference between the Technician and General Exams, and the Extra has been dumbed down to Advanced level, why do we still have people wanting more superfluous license classes that are growing closer together in difficulty allatime?

And in the end, it's still allabout Morse Code with you.

frequency privileges?

If you remove the RF Safety, and change the power levels below that required for an RFEA, then you have the makings of a simplified amateur class.

I have never heard of HF causing any medial problems which can be proved to relate. However, UHF and beyond is quite different ...

not realy becuase you overlook that what ever result MUST serve the public interest and conform the laws of the land (including at least lipservice to the ITU treaty)

the real question is how many peceies do we want to slice it down into Incetnive licensing came into effect as I hear the tale becuase not enough generals of the day were bothering to take and pass the more advanced exams which gave nothing but braging rights in real terms ( is that close enough?)

today we face how much incentive is their going to to upgrade from general to extra considering the greater difficulty of that exam than the general and the size of the incentive?

for an incentive based sheme the pieces of cheese need to be big enough to cause the mice to chase em

I don't think thee is enough cheese for license classes for most people

So when the European countries were dropping the code you didn't want

Yeah, you hit the nail on the head. Amateur radio has been driven by a weird group of "initiation fanatics." Like they are kinda "inducting" ya into a cult or somethin'. Or, kinda like joinin' the masons. Weird group who never outgrew high school and college frat initiations into "secret societies."

Actually, this would be good group for Art Bell to do a show on--"amateur frat initiates" ... If the pyramids were here in the US, they'd use them as the "initiation temple." <erie music plays here>

Me, I just grabbed the mic and set my own style, course never suffered from "mike fright" here. Never had a strong need to "feel a part of" or that I needed others to increase my own self worth. Never found the "official flock of sheep" had that much to offer either.

But hey, to each their own ...

Most grade school kids know about tinyurl, but you seem to be absolutely

No problem as I have been maintaining for quite some time that there is noticeable overlap in the material. In addition, for that reason, I have always encouraged applicants to take a shot at the General written if they do well on the Technician.

No it does not. I've taught the classes to people with wide ranges of backgrounds. The majority of the overlap is in rules, regs, and safety. They have to know this no matter how much you "simplify" an entry level license. You can actually miss all the math questions and still pass the Tech test. Therefore the Tech can't get a whole lot simpler.

No, I'm saying that once people get their license, most will choose not to stay long at the Technician level. Also keep in mind that the General test of the past was much harder than today's General as they took a lot of that material and moved it to the new license classes.

> Third, the Advanced and Extra Exams have been combined, thereby

> Exam,

Not hardly. I've taught the classes for today's Extra exam. The VEC Question Pool Committee combined the material from the old Advanced and Extra and created a monstor question pool covering all those topics. The only "break" is that you end up taking one written test of 50 questions instead of two tests of 40 and 50 questions for a total of 90 questions. Today's Extra exam has an 800+ question pool to select from for that 50 question test.

> not pushing it toward an MSEE like some of you would like to > think.

I've never made that assertion nor implied it. That MSEE has to learn a whole lot more than was ever covered in the Amateur radio exams.

> So if there is so little difference between the Technician and > General Exams, and the Extra has been dumbed down to Advanced level,

I did not say there is so little difference between the Tech and General. Merely that it is reasonable for a person to study to go to General either right at the beginning or shortly thereafter.

Nor has the Extra been dumbed down to the Advanced class. If you were to talk to any of the people who earned their Extra under the pre-2000 system, they will tell you that the Advanced class written test was the hardest of all the writtens. That is where the bulk of the difficult technical material was. The Extra class test addressed more detailed knowledge of the rules, regs, what it takes to be a VE, and a small amount of technical material. When the system was changed, all the material for both the Advanced and Extra went into the new Extra question pool

I don't bother getting involved with that discussion as most just try to twist it to suit their own purposes. There is some material that must be memorized just as frequencies and equations. Other things must be understood as to when and how to use those equations.

convoluted.

Why should anybody even bother with such a limited license? It would be so limited people would get bored and drop out or immediately upgrade. Not worth the investment of time.

And the General test covered the appropriate material at that time.
Although the "incentive licensing" had major implementation issues, it did have the benefit of bringing people into the hobby since they could take the material in smaller bites instead of having to learn everything all at the same time. It achieved that goal.

So Sheesh! yourself. You are trying to compare the system of several decades ago with newer systems.

You read into conclusions that are not there. I did not say anything about wanting to be like the European countries. I was pointing out the fallacy of trying to make our system match the European approach. If you get your wish of a single license class, the FCC may choose to go that route. It's more of a cautionary note, the "be careful what you wish for sort of thing."

Personally I think two or three license classes is appropriate and have thought so since I became involved in amateur radio.

Yeah, participating in long drawn out conversations where 20WPM is fast (even abbreviated) would only assist me in developing stress related heart conditions. For this reason alone, it just is NOT that fun to play with these guys with a code reader setup ...

I don't know the figures, but the avg conversation must consist of hundreds of words per minute.

Fairly frequently I run into a slow talker, I am quick to site some engagement or appointment I must hurry off to (just being polite.) Some of these slow talkers got some age too, either they are unwilling or unable to come up to speed--and certainly what is going on has escaped them for decades--meaning--I am NOT the only one who ditches these people, and QUICKLY!

Since people are split on this issue, my opinion is that we are probably at

Personally I just can't see expecting the new amateur to do that much work just to be able to start exploring amateur radio. History has shown that having a basic licensing option is helpful to the growth and health of amateur radio.

>Then decide how many steps are needed from
>"not a ham" to "full privileges".

Agreed. Three steps has always seemed appropriate to me. I would not find two objectionable. However if we keep the full privilege license as is, then three really seems better. The introductory license to try out amateur radio and then an intermediate license (like the General) that gives a wide range of privileges but does not require delving into the more exotic technical and mathematical areas. Then the full privilege license.

>While doing this, it is important to remember

That is why I favor three license levels but do encourage people to move up to General as quickly as they can study the material. I've taught classes for Tech, General, and Extra to people who had no significant radio/electronics/engineering/math backgrounds. So I'm quite familiar with this issue. With the exception of two who did not take the Extra test, all my students have passed the respective licenses for which they were studying. The ironic part is the two who did not attempt the Extra class test had significant math/electronics/radio backgrounds. A lady who was an administrative assistant (no significant background in math/technical/radio subjects) passed her Extra with flying colors.

I wasn't into radio until 1992 and the codeless Tech was already rapidly becoming the entry point of choice. So I can't really comment on this. However my elmer/teacher strongly encouraged us to go for Tech+ right off the bat. I'm glad I did. However, it took so long for the license to come that I passed my General in the meantime and went on the air as a /AG the day that first license arrived. So I did not experience operating as a Novice.

>There was never any requirement for newcomers

When the codeless Technician came into being, it quickly became the entry point of choice and rapidly chipped away at the Novice licensing approach.

Nobody in my neighborhood has any "common TV

We have excellent cable TV service, both analog and digital (we have digital).

than 4 sat dishes. :-)

Northern house is in Kitsap County, WA. Ten acres full of virgin evergreens 60 to 100 feet high. Will undergo some thinning out soon. Lots of good raw timber there that will fetch some nice dollars. :-)

Mr. Real Estate Expert, just go to the Kitsap County and look it up. It is public knowledge in their records. Real Estate taxes are all paid on that one, too. :-)

"Military style" rotatable...requires an 80 foot diameter circle clearance for full rotation. Just like the one at NADC Warminster, PA, over 30 years ago. No sweat. But, I don't like to live IN an antenna farm. Did that for half a year (2 square miles of antenna farm).

To WHERE would I rotate that rotatable antenna? YOU are the self-defined "expert" on the area. Don't you KNOW?

Oh, my, Mr. Real Estate EXPERT doesn't KNOW EXACTLY?

Tsk, tsk, from all the blathering you did on Zoning
a few months ago, I thought you would KNOW!

Here's a clue, Shylock: I live a mile from the edge of BUR; civilians know it as "Bob Hope Airport." The FAA must be advised if something is erected 200 feet above normal terrain. However, "normal terrain" goes higher than 300 feet above my back yard. :-)

>There's also the fact that the antenna must not extend over adjacent >properties without permission of the owners.

Not a problem in the back. Got a nice clearance space there for anything rotating in an 80-foot circle. You want to check that out? No problem. Just go to Mapquest and enter my USPS address. Get the address from some old Ham Radio bylines...hasn't changed for 44 years. :-)

You can even see a somewhat dated aerial photo of the location, see the relative sizes of everything. Or, you could go to the L.A. County records, even get a topographic map of the area. Won't cost you much and you would be oh so EXACT on data! Don't you KNOW all those things? You said you "were familiar with the area" or words to that effect.

Now IF you really were "familiar," then you would KNOW that I have NO, repeat NO cee-cees here at the southern house. None in the northern one. Go LOOK for that non-existant CC&R, Shylock, prove me wrong...

>It's clear that the rules change has resulted in a lot of

Tsk, so far, the vast majority have been just class changes, renewals, and vanity call applications.

>It's way too early to see long-term trends based on Define "way too early." The trend is already present. Even Dee Flint noticed it first-hand in her local VE group.

Have YOU done anything to help newcomers to US amateur radio? Get them into the exam locations in the droves that all you morsemen PROMISED were going to happen?

>Does that mean the changes have failed to cause growth?
>I don't think so - I think it's simply too early to tell.

When would be a good time for you to "tell?" 2027?
2017?

You already stated that overall licensee numbers were dropping. Do you have very short attention span disorder?

In the 11 days of 22 Feb to 4 Mar, the US total individual licensees dropped 369. That's over 3 a day average. That's been happening steadily for over three years.

>Whether Len is part of that or not really isn't clear
>yet. Perhaps he is, perhaps he's not, and

Jay-Suss! I've left enough clues for even an Inspector Clousseau to figure out! :-)

>Do you really want Len to get an amateur license, >Steve?

He doesn't want anything but suffering and death for ANYONE disagreeing with him. No one need be an Inspector "Clue-so" to see that!

So, Sister, do you think you've got the cojonnes to reply to me directly or are you going to go through the SAME procedure as usual? :-)

See you on the 13 cm bands...

Too big a step in privileges and test material to go with just Tech and Extra. If one must boil it down to two, then General and Extra would be a better split.

No, it wasn't. It is substantially more difficult today. And don't forget that half of the OLD General test is now called "Technician."

How could it not be?

Exactly, and you say that as if I didn't know it.

So what do you get when you combine questions from a lower license class with that of a higher license class? You have REDUCED standards for that higher license.

Imagine the old Novice Q pool being combined with the Extra Q pool for the Extra license... that should magnify my point so that even you can see it.

I believe you did, but will accept that is not what you meant (unless you say it again).

That would be known as the "Old General." They were split in the Spring of 1987.

Sure it has.

It was. I took and passed both.

So the Extra was already dumbed down, and now it is combined with a lower class pool...

Sounds really, really dumbed down now.

My opinion is that the VEC needs to cover being a VE, not a additional, superfluous license class.

A very small amount.

Which is why it's dumbed down.

Ahem...take a look at the chart in Part 97. Maximum allowed power before having to do an "evaluation" is 500 W at 40m but it drops down linearly to 50 W at 10m. All bands at VHF at 50 W. At UHF it is 70 W at 70cm and rises to a maximum of 250 W at 13 cm and holds there on up to maximum frequency of anyone's allocations.

When I was at Fort Monmouth Signal School in '52
and taking the radar systems introductory class, cadre used to put a wad of steel wool on the end of a bamboo pole and hold it in front of a 1 MW peak search radar. Steel wool blazed! One of the wesen-heimers made a remark about "it was dangerous to steel wool" with much ha-ha-ing from the group. The next day we got a demo with a slab of outdated (uncut) bacon. Instant fried bacon. Wisenheimer shut up. Search radar was somewhere in S Band or 2 to 4 GHz. (microwave ovens are 2.4 GHz)

When I worked at Hughes Aircraft Co., El Segundo, CA division, one of the airborne radar final check-out guys got one hand slightly fried from playing around with adjustments with the (F-94?) radar. Wore a large bandage for about two months after returning from a medical leave of about a month. That was '57 to '59 time period. Peak powers ain't something to fool with, not up-close and personal to the RF source.

On the other hand, the tower monkeys who service the TV and FM towers on Mt. Wilson overlooking L.A. aren't shielded and seem to survive. Was an article about them in L.A. Times about a half year ago. TV and FM sit right in the most sensitive frequency region for RF Exposure. Go figure...

Alas, I'm not above misplacing an adjective or adverb at 5am, however, the gist of my comments is still accurate. Nitpick if you have nothing better to add.

Of course I can.

I've never had a "dozen" club callsigns.

My Hawaiian callsign is not a vanity callsign according to the FCC. Don't believe me? Look it up on ULS. Vanity callsigns are marked as 'HV'. Sequentially-assigned callsigns are labelled as 'HA'. My callsign is an 'HA' callsign, not an 'HV'.

Is there a requirement in Part 97 that I change my callsign to reflect where I "live".

Well, with smc and computer buses setting standards, most amateurs are NOT going to be building their own equipment, indeed, none may (by this, I mean not in the conventional sense of yester-decades.)

Amateur radio will go component and the case, most likely, will look like the case of a custom built computer (indeed, at this time the computer and communications radio seem destined to meld into the same package), when as long as manufacturers obey standards these "component cards" will plug in and interface with all other standard meeting components manufactured by either the same manufacturer or any other manufacturer. In other words, a sound card by one manufacturer with mate up with any other manufacturers receiver, or receiver components. Same with the xmitter and amp components.

A state of the art communication receiver will have "it works in a drawer."

The computer is the model and sets the standard communication equipment must now come up to, to go state of the art. Manufacturers resist this because proprietary equipment provides them more profit in such a small market. Indeed, most manufacturers want to sell you the whole transceiver so no other manufacturer can see part of the sales.

As soon as the standard is set by an innovative, bold and progressive corp. the rest will see the light and fall into conformance.

In the long run should increase profits from communications sales DRAMATICALLY! However, with the dyed-in-wool resistance this is meet through monopoly communications manufacturers--this may still be a decade away, amateurs suffer in the meantime. :(

There were several changes. There was the change to the incentive licensing where material was moved from the General to the Advanced and Extra. That changed General test was the one that was the same for the Technician and the General. Then a decade later or so, the General test was split to a Tech written and General written.

Combining material does not dumb down a category. Dumbing down requires removing material. The material has not been removed. It has made the Extra harder because you cannot take the material in smaller chunks. You still have to learn all the same material but do it all at once.

> So what do you get when you combine questions from a lower license

No you do not as no material was removed. It's actually more difficult because you have to do it all at once.

Nope it does not make your point. Only if material is removed does it become easier. If you just combine material without removing any, you make it harder.

I've taught the material. It has not not been dumbed down. Either way, whether you took the two tests separately or took today's single test, the same quantity of material has to be learned.

He said that his Technician wife got him into amateur radio.

The RRAP concensus is that Tech wives use amateur radio for "honey-do's," but Mike says it was different for him.

Nothing is what it appears to be with Mike. It's all somehow very different. Maybe his middle initial "P" stands for Houdini?

I thought I had?

For the new QP with the General set to start on 1 Jul 07 there are a total of 1679 questions for all three writtens. Since only 120 questions make up all three, the number of possible test questions are in a ratio of 13.99:1. That is MORE than the 10 minimum required in FCC regulations.

The Extra class exam (50 questions) has a ratio of 16.04:1
pool to required, new General 13.86:1, Techinician that began in January is 11.20:1.

Just thought I'd toss that into the maelstrom. :-)

Of course it is true, Mark.

Way back, a long, long time ago, before you even appeared on USENET, there was a huge uproar over this web site called 'dejanews' which archived every USENET posting made. Many claimed "copyright infringement".

Yet, here is Google (having acquired Dejanews some years ago), still archiving every word.

So, when can we expect you to file in federal court against Google?

Nobody has claimed your words aren't yours, only that comments made in a public forum are, by default, public domain.

I always wanted a KW amp.

Finally the old guy who assisted me into radio broke down, brought out the greenlee punches, drills, hacksaw, ceramic sockets, tubes and we constructed one, I certainly could NOT have done it with out his assistance. We scavenged old military gear I had accumulated and stuff he had for wide spaced (HV) variable caps, hv transformer, filter caps, chokes, resistors, plate coils, etc.

In the end, it was rather large, plenty of space to work on stuff in there, and even room for an old LARGE muffin fan.

My shack, back then was the basement of my parents home. It got cold down there in the winter, those tubes filaments (10amps at 2.5v if I remember correctly X 2, PLUS the plate dissipation when xmitting) provided some nice warmth (plates would glow a nice dim/dull red when ya got long winded and peaked her for max tube capacity)--I sat on the expanded metal case of that amp which sat upon a low stool, and enjoyed it!

Later had three boys. Only bothersome thing is that third eye in the middle of their foreheads ... ROFLOL!

Comeon', ya can't kid a kidder!

Actually, that is a true story ... well, except for the third eyes.

HF just doesn't excite the molecules in the body to the degree necessary to do damage (well, a 10kw-100KW I might begin to worry about.)

VHF I would be cautious of, but then I think 50w is conservative and low here, UHF and above I have NO doubt about ... HF is about as dangerous as high powered audio freqs, excepting ones ears.

Yep, those guys are here alright.

Now don't get me wrong. Intelligent, organized, logical, structured and mutually respective exchanges over the waves I SUPPORT!

Good ole boy rules I don't have much use for, I am not a "joiner" either. One-on-one rag chews, and a few old guys chewin' the rag on a subject all enjoy is where it is at--non-formal--relaxed ...

Strange, the few I do exchange conversation with are kinda like me, I like it that way. If you are a non control freak, I'll most likely enjoy ya', whether you agree with me or not.

My BIGGEST turnoff? Pseudo-military, self-important-bags-of-hot-wind!

The military did NOT restrict newbies from a successful
morse code class to "entry level" spectrum spaces.
They were expected to PERFORM as directed.

The same with voice operators. Once they learned the various radios in school they were out in the field, NONE having any "entry level" spectrum spaces.

Now, not all in here have had military experience. None of those realizes that the military is primarily trained to DESTROY the enemy. Using radios while the enemy is busy trying to destroy you is one of the harshest environments I know. There's no "entry level" for that, either, no spay-shull space for "novice killers." :-(

There's wayyyy too much emphasis on this class-distinction nonsense in a HOBBY activity that is not allowed (by law) to be a commercial radio service.

Kb9rqz: Seriously, your own references give no indication whatever that anyone is out to get you and in fact, reading them as a neutral observer shows just the opposite to be true. Your are trying to build a case to get someone you do not like in trouble, based on meaningless babble. You play a serious game to attempt to bring somebody down hard. Possibly you have no conscience. You are a dangerous person whom people should avoid lest you attempt to discredit them for life due to any small disagreement over a minor topic, in this case one so innocuous as Morse Code! I suggest that you yourself have exposed your fantasy game on the usenet as ludicrous and, whether ot not you really believe these things, you need serious psychiatric care. If you believe them, you are suffering from paranoia. If you know they aren't true but are merely trying to harm a certain person in a way completely unproportional to your minor verbal scuffle, then you are a social psychopath. You may be having abnormal thoughts and fears, a fundamental form of paranoia or you may simply be a psychopath. I cannot tell. No one who reads your posts, even a "real MD", can help you without in-person psychotherapy and proper management of anti-psychotic or anti-psychopathic medication (if there is such a thing). If you are a social psychopath with no conscience, I don't know what can be done; many suffering from that illness end up in prison. In any case, you need help.These words are not meant to belittle you; you will be far better off if you follow my advice and seek some professional counseling..

In the grand scheme of newsgroups, irrelevance is a given for pretty much anyone who posts. You only have as much as the other person gives you. I came and went from this newsgroup several years ago because I didn't want to be involved in the behaviors I saw back then. Mark may have been here then, but if he was, I don't remember him.

It's an unmoderated newsgroup. People post whatever they want to post. That's how it works and that's how it's supposed to work. If people decide to post nonsense using nyms to get Mark to post replies, so be it. To me, that's better than having someone from on high decide what gets posted and deleted. So, I guess I'm more cool with the nyms and Mark's replies than I am with the censorship. That's just me though.

There is that group that you included in the subject line you know. I simply advised you that, if you don't like it here, perhaps there is a better place for you. However, you may want to note that I think Mark has posted there also. I don't like it there and you don't see me trying to post flame bait there do you? You won't see me posting there at all.

BTW, I don't post to this ng very much. I've got some personal issues that are taking up a lot of my time right now, so I don't understand your accusation that I'm the last author for most threads in the ng. I found that part particularly funny. I'll let you have the last word in this one though. I've been at ng's too long to be drawn in to this BS unless I have time to waste and right now I don't.

I agree that this is the way it seems to be heading. However, I think ARRL members should pressure the organization to lobby the FCC for another, coded class who could exclusively operate on certain sections of the OOK morse sub bands. I think it would be good for society if we could preserve the mode for the future, given that there a certain albiet isolated occaisions when its use can be extremely beneficial to society.

What's the 10th club callsign too, while you're at it?

> He's obviously denying it.

I'll always deny having 12 club callsigns, because it isn't true.

If you want to amend your claim to stating, that I had 9 club callsigns assigned to me, I would agree with you, because that would be an accurate statement.

> He said that his Technician wife got him into amateur radio.

Nope, never said that either.

Would you like to post a google link to show otherwise?

What I did state is my wife's family is entirely composed of hams, both her father and her two brothers are licensed amateurs (Advanced, General and Tech). They're the ones that "got" me into amateur radio, starting way back in 1982.

> Nothing is what it appears to be with Mike.

Only because you like to invent things up as you go along, sort of like the "12 club callsigns" claims.

Too bad, so sad for you, simple google queries render history that doesn't coincide with your fabricated stories.

I never said or implied that you, were the last author for most threads, and if that is the way it came across, I apologize. I did imply that a certain other person was and if there was a cross

Google "reposts" your articles every time someone does a search.

They profit off your postings by charging advertisers for ad space on the web pages that show results of searches for your postings.

I'm still waiting for the reference to the section of US code that states it is illegal to reference a USENET posting from one group in another.

I've just taken this posting, and posted it on my web site.

Completely impossible. Miccolis tells us that the additional license classes, Advanced, and Extra, were needed because the FCC wanted amateurs to be more knowledgeable, so moving General questions to Advanced and Extra would not serve that purpose. Unless Miccolis was wrong.

That is correct.

It does when you combine it with material from a lesser class QP.

Not always, and I've explained it to you too many times to go over it another time. You either get it or you don't.

You run the risk of simpler questions being selected for that 50 question exam. It is easier.

When half of the material and questions previously earned a lower

My mind is just fine. You better worry about yourself with all that paranoia you have going on with your perception that you are being stalked and threatend.

But good move Mark, first you call me a liar, then you back peddle, then you resort to the old mental angle. I not the one who lusts after the same sex, you better look in the mirror if you want to see a person with mental issues.

C'mon Markie, you lost total track of the thread and if I want to have a private chat in MY thread, I will post it. Just because someone post something, does not mean he or she wants a response from every boob who reads the group.

Because you were responding to an answer for Bob Brock whereas I was responding to his post, besides if I want to have a private chat in MY thread, I will.

I disagree, but that just proves your point!

So let's assume for discussion that the current requirements for Extra remain the same. Is it reasonable to ask all new hams to learn all that material to get a license? I say it's not.

Of course if someone wants to, they can.

I think we can do better.

Agreed.

That's great!

But remember that not all new hams take amateur radio classes. Not practical for a lot of folks.

Not really. The defacto entry level license has all VHF/UHF, including full power at "meat cooking frequencies" (thanks to WK3C for that phrase). Which means a lot of testing details on that stuff.

But they only have two modes on part of 10 meters, and one mode on parts of 80/40/15.

We can do better than that for entry-level!

What drove the change was the repeater boom of the late 1970s and 1980s. Splitting the old General/Tech written in half in 1987 pushed it more, and dropping Element 1 for Tech in 1991 sealed the deal.

I was a Novice for about 10 months (1967-68). Lot of fun, many contacts with incredibly simple gear.

The change had begun years earlier, driven by the repeater boom.

Here's a whole license structure for ya,
in ten points:

1) Three classes of license: Basic, Intermediate, Full (change the names if you don't like them - Third, Second, First, Novice, General, Extra, whatever)

2) HF/MF bands split into subbands by mode and split again by license class. Some bands (30 meters) may be split by mode only.

3) "Basic" license test is simple 20-25 question exam on regs, procedures, and safety. Very little technical and RF exposure stuff. Main objective is to keep Basics out of trouble. Basics get 100-50 watts on HF/MF and 25 watts or so on VHF/UHF (power level is below the point where RF exposure evaluation required).
Modes are CW, analog voice, PSK31, RTTY and many of the other common data modes like packet. Basics cannot be VEs, control ops for repeaters, or club trustees. Basics get most VHF/UHF and about half of HF/MF spectrum, including parts of all subbands-by-mode. Basic is meant as the entry level. Easy to get, lots of privs, yet there's still a reason to upgrade.

4) "Intermediate" license test is more complex 50-60 question exam on regs, procedures, safety and technical stuff. Intermediates get 300-400 watts on all bands, all modes. Intermediates can be VEs after qualification (see below), control ops for repeaters, and club trustees. Intermediates get all VHF/UHF and about three quarters (or more) of HF/MF spectrum.

5) "Full" license test is quite complex 100-120 question exam on regs, procedures, safety and technical stuff. Mostly technical, with some regs to cover expanded privs. Fulls get all privileges, modes, bands, etc. except that Fulls can be VEs only after qualification (see below).

6) All licenses are 10 year and fully renewable/modifiable. No age requirements or limits.

7) Basics have six-character calls, Intermediates have five- or six-character calls, and Fulls have four-, five-, or six-character calls. Nobody has to give up an existing callsign.

8) Separate 30-35 question test for VE qualification, open to Intermediates and Fulls, which allows them to be VEs. Existing VEs are grandfathered.

9) Existing Novices, Techs and Tech Pluses become Basics, existing Generals and Advanceds become Intermediates, and existing Extras become Fulls. Existing hams can continue to use their current privileges when they exceed privileges granted by the new system as long as they retain license documents showing their old license class. Existing Tech Pluses who can show proof of license before Mar 21, 1987 get Intermediates.

10) Change to new system is at least six months to one year after announcement to allow time for question pool reorganization and so existing hams can upgrade under present rules if they want.

End result is a system that is easy to get into (Basic is envisioned as a 21st century version of the Novice) and has reasonable but meaningful steps to reach full privileges. Testing matches the privs granted. Power levels are set about one S-unit apart. Nobody loses any privileges. There are only three license classes and four written tests, so FCC doesn't have more work.

well then so be it let it die if it is that ill

I don't think morse code use is in that much danger, although we as Hams would I feel be bettr off if it did die and soon

Most normal people can follow a thread and only respond when in conversation, apparently you can't, so it seems that you post to every post to cover all bases so you don't miss anything. God you are so needy to want to belong so badly.

> > Just because someone

Obiviously you don't care what anyone else on the group wants, thats why you hijack so many threads, you can add selfish to your long list of defects, and therefore don't whine and cry when everybody challenges you about your behavior.

It is the same thing, you just don't see it that way because you scope of thinking is apparently dulled. I was responding directly to a communcation from Bob, and then you posted like I was talking to you. Why do you think that people can't communicate directly and solely to each other through messages on this group? Its done all the time but you don't see it because you can't follow a thread.

Dee
If this comes across as quarrelsome then I apologize in advance. The technician class license serves a useful purpose as a place for those who are interested in local public service radio. I got two of my Community Emergency Response Team members to take the weekend class to prepare for the technician exam. Both of them passed and are now ready to serve as Radio Telephone Operators (RTO) for there units. If training for emergency communications service isn't a legitimate function of Amateur Radio then nothing is. Not every one is interested in DX work. The ability to talk across the area without depending on a rather complex and brittle trunking or cellular system is attractive to some folks. The only reason that I'm striking for the higher licenses is that I'd like to learn more about radio and it's various modes of transmission.

I believe that the present general is a little too light on the theory however. I was able to prepare for the upgrade exam in only two weeks. I was urged to take the element four exam when I turned in the element three even if only to get an idea of what I was preparing for. It was very humbling to take that element with no preparation but it did give me an impression of the difficulty level of element four. From what I saw something between the present general and the extra would be a good level for the general test to be. A heavier emphasis on field measurement and other aspects of Radio & Electric Safety would be one aspect to consider making more demanding.

"Who regulates the amateur radio service?"

The Technician test is the Technician test. I wouldn't Miccolo Tesla would disagree about anything not involving morse code.

The PUBLICLY-stated "purpose" of incentive licensing was to advance knowledge and experience. The REAL purpose of incentive license created a desired class distinction that the morsemen wanted, complete with status, rank, and more privileges for the morsemen. That is sooooo evident.

Ah, but those who clawed their way up the incentive plan will run around saying ONLY the PUBLIC purpose. Typical hypocritcal BS on their "superior" posteriors. :-(

Are you saying you see that last as a positive thing? It would certainly be good for the technical education industry but does that make it a good thing for amateur radio.

If a formal course were a requirement then I imagine that it would be easier to find one. I'd love to find a formal class for the extra class material. I'd even be happy with a referral to a respectable correspondence or on line course. Anyone have any suggestions along those lines.

Hallo you ll'
Again a nice discussion and a lot of aspects
CWing or not or another information code
From historical point of vieuw CW is the oldest and in my opinion the reliablest
and CW was a boarder between HF and VHF caused by brain damage i can concentrate on the recieving dittery dah dit of the morsecode
and so became the morsecode a boarder betweem different kinds of radioamateurs
practice cw was a license the use unmanageable power practice cw became the roots of the QRPers CWers became a elitegroup of amateurs however they did nt understand the basic goal
after cw proof they rapidly forgot the code and have boasting on DX and when they met an antenneaproblem they let solve their problem by the techinical VHFers
SO be a "better " amateur however what is better contacting or understanding

Well, I wouldn't worry about that too much. Unless they can make a legitimate argument that the questions are unnecessary/irrelevant/illogical or are "self-protectionist" and simply meant to make the test over-difficult so as to control numbers or who can enter amateur radio, what would give them a leg to stand on?

Perhaps they could also make the argument that the tests are "obsfucated", deliberately misleading or "entangled with deliberate complexity" in an effort to confuse and mislead. However, that would be quite apparent to the avg educated joe who is familiar with radio/electronics.

No, unless they would have a legitimate argument, they would most likely be dismissed along with any of their false claims.

the case could made if we went to one class and the test was like the current extra perhaps that that are over complex I can't recall the last I needed to know the vector corordantes of a given Inductive system in order to operate a Radio or assemble a radio

Isn't this what they claimed the code test did?

Clearly, this is a fully 100% accurate statement, since 3 of the 4 options presented as answers for each multiple-choice question is incorrect.

I believe others made similar comments regarding elimination of the code requirement 20+ years ago.

The trend in amateur radio licensing is to make things "easier".

Well yes, and not only what that argument correct, that argument was acted upon by the FCC and morse was eliminated. However, those making false claims as to CW's viability, and relevancy still attempt to justify past practices of using it as a barrier to new licensees, they eventually will give up this insanity as they find this has lost them all their credibility.

> Clearly, this is a fully 100% accurate statement, since 3 of the 4 options

Interesting view. However, since this is accepted practice and used by most elementary schools, high schools, colleges, state and federal institutions it is the preferred method of testing. However, the context of these questions need to examined closely as those with self-serving interests can attempt to manipulate these questions for an outcome they wish--on BOTH sides!

> I believe others made similar comments regarding elimination of the code > requirement 20+ years ago.

Yes. The insanity of requiring morse testing did become the "elephant in the china closet" which was over-looked. Seemingly, this was a type of "mass hysteria" or "mass insanity" as you see in vigilante groups, or other self-protectionist groups. Although it speaks ill of the power of the FCC to present itself as a logical and relevant governing agency, most of those problems have been eliminated or are in the process of being so ...

> The trend in amateur radio licensing is to make things "easier".

Well, as people become more and more educated on the whole, all of education just seems easier. When you basic understanding out of high school these days equals the education you only used to get from jr. colleges in past years, that happens. A good many of the old wives tales, misconceptions and ignorance is fading away in a better educated world. I mean your avg seventh or eight grader is highly computer savvy these days and his/her access to the internet gives them unlimited access to any knowledge in mans archives.

The ability of motivated individuals is truly unlimited when they have access to all mankinds accumulated stores of knowledge. An advantage those of yesteryear never had and will never be able to make up for ...

What's the problem Mark, why do you have to stoop to being nasty and using foul language. But it proves several of my points, that because this is not a physical world, you act accordingly, and no one can have a rational discussion with you. In the real world, I can guarantee you would not tell me to my face to "get the fk out of here, unless you have a strong desire to start sporting a full set of false teeth.

But by the way you whine and cry and change everypost to someone is stalking you, maybe you should take your own advice.

CW's relevancy and viability, and its continued usage as a skills test in the ARS, are two separate issues as I see it.

I see CW, still, as a very viable and very relevant mode of operation in the ARS. The last time I recall somewhere around 50% of hams polled indicate they use CW. That makes it very relevant to the ARS today.

Now, whether or not it should remain a test element is a different argument altogether. For a very long time, I have been a proponent of eliminating the code test, and instead strengthening the written examinations.

Others have suggested retaining CW as a skills test, and while I understand that line of thought, I disagree with it today. I'm not sure there is one 'skills' test for the ARS which is really suitable.

Instead, I would rather see us focus on simply ensuring that people who become licensed actually have a solid grasp of the knowledge we ask them to learn as part of the licensing process. I see the current structure of the theory examinations as simply not doing this. When you can "pass" the licensing exam yet get every single question on rules and regulations wrong -- that says something is seriously broken.

Perhaps, but this is simply not the case today.

http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/articles/A41278-2004Dec6.html

From my daily interaction with recent US high school graduates, I can definitely see that the vast majority are lacking basic math and english skills, compared to their foreign counterparts. Virtually all the US-based students I work with need some form of remedial or "basic" english and math classes, whereas their foreign counterparts are beyond the "entry level" freshman math and science classes from the get-go.

I don't post enough to hijack threads. I've posted 20 times during the month of March and only on my own threads, you on the otherhand you have already posted 275 times on everybody eles's threads, you have hijacked so many threads this month its ridiculous and its only the fifth day of the month, by the end of the month you will have posted 1375 times. Your problem is you don't realize that this is inappropriate behavoir. Your like some bully crapping on everybody's

Same difference, it is still two people talking to each other communicating, there is no difference between here, a grocery store, a ham band, or any other means. People exchange their thoughts directly and only to each other all the time, that why we have quotes, everything is not always about you..

Who is defaming you? I started this thread about the moderated group, you hijacked MY thread, and you took it off topic. Everything that I have posted is based upon my view and observation of the posts on here and responses to specific posts. If you don't like it, you can take a quarter and call someone who cares.

If a law has been broken, call the law. You know what law has been broken, none.

And who has forged a name. Dloyd Lavies is my pen name, many authors have pen names, it is legal. Don't try to play lawyer, it is apparent that you have no legal training whatsoever because you throw acusitory legal terms around without knowing the implications of such terms.

> you do not enage in on topic post that is a violation of neNG policy

You are blabbering something about a violation of NG policy, but your fumble fingers has made it unreadable, but I will address one policy violation issue, which is your excessive posting. Your excessive posting is a violation of Google Groups Policy, because if you posted directly into the group instead of a news server and using all of your different names, you access to post would be limited. It is apparent that you post using one name until you are suspended, then you start using another, just to flood the group with your posts.

Google Groups Help Center

Is there a limit on how often I can post?

Yes, there are a few ways in which posting frequency is limited. One limits the number of messages posted to a single group within a short period of time. If that limit is reached, posting to that group will be frozen temporarily and you'll be instructed to post again later.

Another limits the number of messages a single user can post via email in a short period of time. If that limit is reached, your posting account will be disabled. If your account has been disabled, you can click the "contact us" link below and request that your account be reactivated. We'll review your request, and let you know what we decide.

We may also limit the number of messages a single user or computer can post via our website in a short period of time. If that limit is reached, posting will be frozen temporarily and you'll be instructed to post again later.

Please note, we are unable to provide the exact numbers that trigger these posting limits as the limits are subject to change.

These limits are to protect the users of our service and their email accounts, our groups, and the Usenet community from poorly configured auto-responders, spammers, robots, trolls, and thread hijacking.

> id tell you in heartbeat and you'd do nothing

you can find anytime you like Id rather you did not esp now it would be rough getting the blood up off the snow

What blood, you would be on your knees in about a 10 seconds withont any blood at all. I saw your photo, no problem. The goal is to apply a lot of pain without any residual evidence of such force. Many law enforcement agencies and federal employers, such as my former, provide excellent training in the application of these techniques. But of course, this requires me to actually touch you, but you appear to be way too filthy and dirty that I would ever want to touch your. Do ever take a bath? I bet LLoyd is cleaner than you.

nope. indeed I don't have to wait for the first blow to land,
althought that would be safer legaly

Sure Markie, that defense would not stand a chance in any district or judical circuit in the US, even in the 8th circuit.
Like I said, it is apparent that you have no legal training whatsoever.

>not the case in Michigan

Actually, Michigan is one of the more liberal circuits, you better have significant evidence to warrant justifiable homicide. The courts would put you away forever if you try to say "oh he was giving me a hard time on the internet after I shit on everyone's postings, and I was scared, so I killed him even though he had no weapons. You are such an idiot.

>>stop whining like a little bitch just because you can't poison the moderated group.

no Dloyd your post that you would kill if you showed means I can kill you out of hand

I would say he threatened to kill if he showed up he showed therfore there was a clear danger I did not know if he was armed or not

Yes myself if I were given the POWER to write the rules and test I would end up with something that would likely be seen as and truel be easier than the current system but not becuase it was easier but becuase it was what I think is needed and proper

No it is not stalking, you have clearly forgot about the hypothetical situation under which this was posted. Its a hypothisis, dummy. How many times do I have to tell you to stop playing lawyer. You have no professional legal experience and don't know the implication of the terms your are using so freely. BTW your the one who implicated blood

It is not defamation, it is subjective, and based upon MY standards of cleanliness. I saw the photo of you, and under my standards, you appear to be a dirty. I've also seen photo's of LLoyd and he does not appear to be as dirty as you, under MY standards. Not everything is black and white, some things are subjective. You may see a glass half empty, I may see it half full. BTW if your going to post on my blog watch your language. Just because you look filty, does not mean you have to use filty language.

You don't see an issue with a testing system where an applicant can get every question wrong dealing with rules and regulations, yet still manage to get licensed because they got the math right?

Or, let's put this another way...

Should someone who has a BSEE automatically be given a ham radio license, if they ask for one?

After all, there is little doubt someone with a BSEE would have the requisite knowledge to "pass" the Tech/General/Extra theory examinations (exception noted next paragraph) with little to no effort.

About the only questions such an applicant would get wrong would be the questions on amateur rules and regulations (which obviously they wouldn't know from their BSEE studies).

However, since the current structure of the theory examinations allows an applicant to fail each and every rules/regulations question, and still "pass" the examination -- well, why wouldn't we just give such an applicant a license anyway, right?

> and what do you porpose

I still hold the opinion that a modification to the licensing system as I proposed in my Y2K restructuring comments are appropriate.

In summary:

1. Require an applicant to pass each "subelement" with a score of 70% or better.
2. Require an overall score of 85% or better

The actual %age in #2 could be a point of discussion. I wouldn't be opposed to likewise lowering it to an overall 70% score as well, although I do think an overall higher score would be better.

> someone flamed me in the 90 for sugesting a license test system where

In principal, you agree with my stance then.

I'm not sure I would agree with the CSCE for each sub-element aspect, though. That could get even more complicated (i.e. requires VEs to maintain separate tests for each sub-element, you can go test for individual sub-elements, etc.) compared to simply one test, say, 100 multiple-choice questions on 10 sub-elements w/ a 70% passing score required in each sub-element and an overall 70% passing grade.

Stalking isn't assault.

I haven't seen any evidence of this "threatened" murder yet.

yes you did you said if you came you would kill me

if you show then it becomes a threat and legaly according to the DA justifies killing you out of hand

That's only because it didn't happen.

Mark, as you can see, has numerous issues.

Your right there never was any threats of murder. Once again, Mark's paranoia has let his imagination run amock.

Again I never said I would kill you. You are the only one who brought up killing.

Is this the part that you are talking about:
>>>"oh he was giving me a hard time on the internet after I shit on everyone's postings, and I was scared, so I killed him even though he had no weapons.>

That was me paraphraseing your lame ass excuse to justify your inplied homicide, as if I am already dead and you are speaking, dummy. You must of only went through the eight grade or special ed. I told you that you can't follow a thread. Too complex for your handicapped ass.

>can I expect a libel suit from you then?

Why, what would I gain. You don't have any wealth your almost a pauper. Don't be so petty.

The bothersome thing is others have reviewed this thread and see no threats made by me concerning killing you or murder, yet you see a threat..could it be that your WRONG and everybody else is RIGHT.

The European approach with one "extra" license class and compulsory classroom training is not such a bad idea for people who operate on HF. Can you imagine that we are now allowing kb9rqz to operate a linear amp whose plate voltage might be >/= 3KV? Do you think kb9rqz is technically qualified to open an AL80-B and change the 3-500Z tube? What if he forgets (or doesn't know to) bleed the the DC bulk caps or even forgets to unplug it? When he electrocutes himself we will have the dumbed-down general license exam to blame. Perhaps linear amp usage should be restricted to extra class, or, we should apply the above stated European approach.

Errr, the FCC eliminated the morse code TEST.

Deignan keeps using the old false argument that the old code test was "the same" as the writtens. He and others have kept up that facade of "all or nothing" for a decade. Obviously the two test types are DIFFERENT.

>However, those making

"They" won't give up, JS. :-)

Deignan is just trying to revive a very dead horse so he can beat on it some more.

One of the MYTHS still prevalent is that "THE TEST," some sort of awe-inspiring, feared thing, represents the SUM TOTAL OF AMATEUR RADIO KNOWLEDGE! Nonsense, of course, but the myth goes on...as does the beat...of the dead horse by others. :-)

A 35- or a 50-question TEST can't possibly show EVERY BIT OF knowledge as so many "olde-tymers" seem to imply. But, to so many, they think the amateur TEST is some equivalent to a college-level test of knowledge. Having taken both types, far more at the college level, even the colleges-universities do NOT consider their multiple-choice tests as representing anything but a student's retention of knowledge UP TO THAT PERIOD OF A COURSE. Those tests in schools are there to both inform instructors of a student's capabilities and also to show the student what they've gained or missed in a course.

Now, the FCC was NEVER chartered as an academic institution.
Not even its predecessor radio regulating agencies. A radio amateur license test is ONLY for the purpose of the FCC in determining whether the FCC thinks an applicant should be granted a license in the amateur radio service. NO MORE.
The FCC decides. The FCC giveth and the FCC can taketh away.

The manual psychomotor skill of morse code cognition is far from any intellectual-academic skill of knowledge of anything more than morse code cognition. It cannot demonstrate any memory retention of regulations, theory, or of accepted practice in amateur radio EXCEPT for morse code use as it is SUPPOSED to be in the amateur radio service.

The FCC has established the number of written test elements for all the radio operator licenses the FCC grants. Since privatization of radio operator testing of about two decades ago, the FCC has yielded CONTENT of questions to the various examiner groups. In itself, the arguments for or against privatization is a very separate one from who has the "right" to regulate. By law (of Congress, 1934 and 1996)
the FCC has the right to regulate. Period.

>> I believe others made similar comments regarding elimination of the code

I think you've left out the self-righteous, self-proclaimed "experts in radio" that some olde-tymers imply they are. :-(

The "handwriting on the wall" was there in radio four decades ago. Radio services had already begun to downplay USE of OOK CW modes for communications or the new radio services simply didn't use those modes.

But, the EMOTIONAL aspect of amateur radio licensing is hardly ever discussed. Olde-tymers are incessantly touting the marvelous things They encountered when young and inexperienced and want to keep those things forever and ever, lest they suddenly realize that They have become old like their beloved morse mode. Even if they acknowledge the reality of age, they have another emotional need to show they are "better than others" in something, anything. High-rate morse code cognition is a convenient "betterment." What is WRONG is their wanting to transfer Their desires to all others not in the amateur radio service that come after them.

>Although it speaks ill of the power of >the FCC to present itself as a logical and relevant governing agency, >most of those problems have been eliminated or are in the process of >being so ...

I am OPPOSED 100% to that viewpoint. The FCC is required to regulate ALL of USA civil radio services. That is a very formidable task and, like it or not, amateur radio is only a small part of that whole task. The FCC serves ALL the citizenry of the USA, not just a minority group in a radio hobby activity.

Having observed FCC Reports and Orders and other legalese on radio regulations of many radio services, I find them most logical in their public statements about their decisions. For over 20 years of observations and over many radio services. Those are clear and straightforward, in rather plain English despite their abbreviations. That they do NOT agree with certain groups or opinions is no cause for blanket condemnation. Decisions have to made and the FCC seems to me to do a credible job of that.

If you want to bring back the Chaos of the radio waves that existed in the 1920s, then go for all the anarchy you can stomach. I do NOT want that and even the aging "flower children" of the 1960s are starting to realize the Opposition to Everything won't get them anywhere.

A couple of points here: Deignan has not toned down his combination of Cynical Chic attitude and general "I am superior to you" coloring of his comments. The "knowledge of computers" (how to use them, really) is generally overblown by those INTO computers as it applies to this modern age. Yes, the Internet is OPEN to all and at least one out of five households in the USA has some form of Internet access. But, on the Internet is a collection of dreck, of bigotry, terribly one-sided crap, emotionally-loaded opinions, all mixed in with public relations, personal "look at me" sort of things AND intellectual knowledge. It is much more convenient to use the Internet to hunt for any of those things than to leave the house and go running around for input different ways.

The Internet made many many things possible but the increase of an individual's knowledge bank is an entirely different subject. The Internet is such a HUGE pot-pourri of different "stuff," so MUCH stuff that it can't be evaluated properly.

Help is not the issue, the issue is you flood the groups with your

Please idiot, do you really think I would waste my time beyond this NG your importance. Beyond your constant barage of posts and your hijacking of threads, you have no relevance to me. Most people on Yea, I know I must be retarded for even dealing with Mark. I felt him, I figured he was asking to be slapped around a bit. So many had

I said the material was combined. I did not say that the question pools were combined verbatim. Instead, a new question pool is/was developed that covers the combined material. The "simpler" versions of the questions aren't used. For example, the Tech test might ask a question such as what is the approximate length of a quarter wave vertical for the 10m band while the General test would have a question that is much more specific like what is the calculated length for a quarter wave vertical for 28.300. The question on the Tech test would have choices that would be enough different that you would not have to actually calculate the exact value. The question on the General test would have at least two of choices close enough together that you would have to calculate the value. Let us say they combined the Tech and General. The approximate question would never be considered for the new pool.

Therefore there is no risk of getting "simpler" questions when the material is combined.

Consider this though. Even though not interested in DX work, there may be some need for long distance communications not just the ability to talk across the local area. In Katrina, everything was down and upon occasion a little bit more than just VHF/UHF was needed and used.

I favor keeping the three licenses but if we had to drop to two, my choice would be General and Extra.

Keep in mind though that as N2EY has said many people do not have all that much background to build upon. I think the Tech and General writtens have about the right amount of difficulty my self.

Not necessarily. I was trying to make the point that people should be careful what they wish for. It may come with unintended consequences. I'm perfectly satisfied with the self study approach and the voluntary classes that some groups sponsor.

Too bad you are not in my area. The club just coaxed me into doing one again this year for the Extra. I don't know of any correspondence or on line classes.

Since you will probably be going the self study route if/when you choose to upgrade, I have the following recommendations:
1. DON'T RUSH. There's a lot of material so if you rush through it, you'll have a hard time remembering it as it will be in your short term memory rather than your long term memory.
2. Periodically review the parts you've already studied. It's a long haul and by the time you get to the end, you might forget what you learned in the beginning.
3. For studying and learning the material use something that explains it in detail like the ARRL extra class license manual.
4. Review use something with the questions, answers and brief explanations like the W5YI question and answer manual
5. Don't hesitate at buying the two separate books. It's worth it. The ARRL book has too many words and the W5YI is too brief. Using the former for the initial study and reference and using the latter for review worked well for my students.
6. Find someone (perhaps through your local club) who would be willing to answer questions and clarify hard parts as you go along.

Most notable in it's absence from the rolls of newly licensed persons is the name"Leonard H Anderson" of California.

Despite both outright insistence of impending licensure to not-so-subtle hints of "well maybe I'll do it this time", it's apparent that Lennie has no intention of doing what he says he'll do.

No doubt this is the reason that Lennie "retired from regular hours" as an alledged "electrical engineer" without having been professionally published or hallmarked in his career...Not even a single one of his "articles" in a long since defunct Amateur Radio periodical have even made it as a footnote in any other publication or paper.

But here he is again...Trying to impress the general public with more of his windy blatherings that really amounts to nothing.

Lame. Really lame.

Wrong again.

The Armed Forces is in the business of defending the United States and implementing of US foreign policy, by force of arms if necessary.

Even the most casual of reader of military teechnology knows that the current state of the art of that "business" is LIMITING that "destruction" (read that "collateral damage") at every possible level.

Today's military can do far more tactically and strategically with far less damage than their forebearers did in World War 2.

If you'd like, I can suggest a couple of sources of research for you to follow-up on so you can get future posts more accurate-sounding...

Or....You can just go on pounding us with tons of windy arguments about how since the correspondents weren't really "there" when "it"

I seriously doubt that they taught him ANYthing about 'appropriate behaviour', however it's now coming back to haunt Morkie's daddie these days...Morkie's already under investigation for his mistreatment of the elder Moron, and I have no doubt that he lays for hours in his own waste wishing that he had taken the opportunity to teach the putz some integrity and responsibility.

As for the other comments about Morkie's assessment of his self-worth vis-a-vis someone's willingness to face prosecution for supposedly "murdering" him, well...That's just Morkie...He's a career victim, and being murdered is, afterall, the ultimate victimization. No doubt the idea keeps him awake at night scheming of ways to lay his worthless demise on someone as an afterlife joke.

Still...I keep several of his rants and own threats on disk and put away. His mouth overrides his common sense all-too-often and it's best to be prepared.

No, you cannot prove you married a female. Why doesn't Gavi (What a name for a woman!) sleep in the same bed with you or take your last name?

Yet it is you that have actually sucked a cock. You drool at the prospect of anybody discussing that perverted practice by two men, and you are a militant homosexual, trying to recurit others into your deviant lifestyle. You always defend your homosexual lifestyle, but on some level you must be ashamed of what you are since you try to say you are "bi".

Notice the conveinent double standard from Marqueer. If you show up at Mark's house unarmed he gets to kill you, it is perfectly legal, and he will walk away scott free. But if his wife's cousins show up at Steve's house he has to stand there, take the beating, which only results in such persons going to prison. I think if your wife's cousins showed up at Steve's house with the intent to do bodily harm, I find it hard to believe that Steve would just stand there and not defend himself. Nice double standard Markie. But of course I'm wrong and your right because you have all the rights as the eternal victim, and we have none, because we don't agree with your constant abuse of the NG's

They need to know allowable power levels for band/freqs which are in use. They need to know the freqs they are allowed to use. It would be nice if they knew how to construct transistor gear (tubes are obsolete and irrelevant.) However, the construction they can pick up later ...

Well, look at just the general population, only about 3 in 100 are intelligent enough to be bothered with. Always has been so, and will be so long into the future. This is nothing new ... you see a prime example of it right here in this news group ...

Some just don't get it and never will ...

The above is false, misleading, inaccurate and comes from a "footing" which is flawed.

True, you MUST be intelligent and educated enough to access INTELLIGENT, ACCURATE, KNOWLEDGEABLE are RELEVANT sources on the internet.

Frequently I limit searches by including:

site:.edu (NOTE: the a colon follows site and a period preceeds edu--with NO spaces in the entire line)

This will limit your searches to ONLY educational institutions, in google ... there is much more you need to know also--TAKE A COMPUTER CLASS!!!

If you doubt the accuracy of what your search engine is giving you, indeed, if you have found inaccurate data returned from your search engine--EDUCATE YOURSELF AND COME UP TO SPEED IN THE PRESENT MILLENNIUM--THE PROBLEM IS NOT THE INTERNET--IT IS YOU!!!

Well, to the avg joe, it is apparent why he didn't like you, most probably don't like ya. I mean, I had that figured out right away!

However, if that is true, he kicked ya just because he didn't like you--that IS UNFAIR.

However, if he kicked ya because you are an ignorant jerk, you really

Not really! They're just ignorant and afraid of what they don't understand. Think of them as sexual savages and it brings everything they do into focus. It's all about superstition and unfounded beliefs. However, that doesn't mean you don't have to watch your back around them tho. Even savages can be dangerous if you don't keep them contained. It's religion-fueled hate and fear. The ones we should be smacking down are the churches, synagogues, and mosques that teach that this kind of hate, intolerance, and psycho-physical violence is ok.

To Whom It May Concern:

Following is a message taken from RRAM. My REJECTED response to that message. And, a message from the automaton on WHY the message was rejected.

This is not surprising. Amateur radio has already had a "code-free" license for 15 years. The claims that there was this huge untapped reservoir of new licensees just waiting for a "code-free HF" license was never supported by any facts -- just supposition and anecdotal claims of "deaf PhD EE friends". Why anyone would even think there would be this huge wave of new applicants is beyond me.

Frankly, I suspect that 99.9% of the activity generated from this latest licensing change will be nothing but upgrades.

As I posted on another thread, I predict at the end of the year we will see a 0 to -1% "growth" in ham radio resulting from these changes.

> > I suspect the next batch will be Hams that found out about the

Given the current state of the theory examinations, I suspect you'll see an upgrade curve which is steep at first, tapers off, and then falls rapidly as well, as the pool of people who are interested in upgrading is exhausted.

Frankly, not everyone is interested in upgrading. My family has Advanced, General, and Tech-class licensees. None of them have any intention of upgrading, the last I knew.

> > Absolutely new people won't be testing until around a year from > > now.

I'm not quite sure how you formulate this claim. It certainly doesn't take a year to study to pass an amateur radio examination. People finding out about the licensing changes now could have a license in-hand virtually immediately. Certainly within 60 to 90 days.

We've already had a codeless license for 15 years. All we have now are codeless HF licenses as well. Is there going to be this huge influx of people who never got licensed as Techs because they couldn't operate HF? I seriously doubt it.

I'm sure there will be some, but the number will be statistically insignificant.

Oh my goodness, then that is the problem, isn't it. You are just ignorant to the fact that HF freqs have MUCH different characteristics than VHF, UHF and the mirowave freqs and beyond--and right up till light freqs ...

A basic book on amateur radio will explain to you why HF would be much more desirable to some ... that should clear up your little problem of ignorance and bring you up to speed with the rest of us.

That's why I don't really bother to post anything to the new moderated group. Although it is a nice change of pace to read threads. Just by the nature of my posting name prevents any posts from getting through the moderators, plus its all subjective, what may get through today, may not pass tomorrow, who has time to decipher what is acceptable today and what will pass muster tomorrow, with each different moderator.

In your case, even the reasoning provided by Paul shows that all the moderators are not on the same page. I would rather post on e-ham or qrz, even though they moderate, it appears that it is at least done at some level of consistent moderation. :) I suppose it is probably easier on those sites because they have the forums broken down by subject matter with individual moderators for each subject, instead of the group moderation in place here. I guess that over time they will work out the kinks to be more consistent.

Sorry, JS, there is NO, repeat no a priori knowledge of whether "all" websites contain "intelligent, accurate, knowledgeable, relevant" stuff for anyone. Now you know as well as I that there are websites which have questionable intelligence, unreferenced "accuracy," and things which are not "relevant" to what is being searched for.

> Frequently I limit searches by including:
>
> site:.edu (NOTE: the a colon follows site and a period preceeds
> edu--with NO spaces in the entire line)

That is very general advice. In electronics engineering
I can (and have, many a time) found ".edu" sites with OLD and OUTDATED manufacturers datasheets and similar "information." By trial and error, I know where I CAN find the latest information on components that are no longer in production but are still on sale somewhere.

> This will limit your searches to ONLY educational institutions, in

Now now, JS, try not to get excited less someone tells you to shove that up your CLASS. :-) > indeed, if you have found inaccurate data returned from your search > engine--EDUCATE YOURSELF AND COME UP TO SPEED IN THE PRESENT > MILLENNIUM--THE PROBLEM IS NOT THE INTERNET--IT IS YOU!!!

Not quite. It is the CONTENT of many, many Internet sites.

Those of us who DO search (not just with Google) are able to find what we want, to ignore many of the hits on search listings out of experience.

For example, you can compare the content of one of the Big3 amateur rig manufacturers, Icom. Icom America has less content on small stuff, especially accessories.
Also on digitized copies of operating manuals. Icom Japan was more on their English site, including old manuals. I'm not sure where the LINKS of HRO take one on getting manuals and brochures but those aren't the same as either Icom site. Take another detailed look at the ARRL as an example. If one searches Applications, that button is really a Link to access the FCC website,
yet the organization implies it is "theirs."

Not ALL amateur equipment makers HAVE a recognizeable Internet site yet (strange but true) or the common, familiar brand name is NOT what their website has in their URL.
[try finding a URL for Maldol antennas...it's a Japanese company, BTW, and I was able to get more direction by going to a UK dealer's webiste to learn much more than was "easily available" elsewhere]

You want Porn? LOTS of it! If that's your bag, that is, not mine [been there, done that...:-)] You want HATE groups? Plenty around for spleen-venting. Want a couple of Al-Quaida agit-prop sites? Watch ABC TV news in HD for the Low Down on them. There be ALL KINDS OF STUFF on the 'Net with some imaginative folks behind them doing the URL disguise thing. You can do you own via GoDaddy, get your own "stealth" URL name, be an "edu" or a "sci" or an "org" and have a blast putting stuff over on others. :-)

Right, and what is it exactly that makes sex organs any more special than any other organ? One removes healthy tonsils to prevent future issues. One removes a healthy appendix to prevent future issues. People have operations to modify their noses -- even though the nose is perfectly healthy. Women have breast reductions even though their breasts are perfectly healthy. Is the donation of a working kidney to someone who's kidney is not functioning properly a "mutilation"? People are not their sex organs, or their noses or their breasts, or their kidneys. They are much more than that. Too many people have this weird idea that gender identity is inherent in their sex organs. It's a body part no more or less important than any other body part. And, oh by the way. One does not mutilate their sex organs during sex reassignment. it's called restructuring one's body to match their gender. But I wouldn't expect you to understand that unless you were willing to try to put your prejudices aside. To explain it to you I'd have to be able to explain "color" to person blind from birth. You don't live it you won't understand it. Perhaps you've just swallowed to much myth from the people who were supposed to teach you the reality of diversity and instead taught you prejudice and fear. You could learn the truth if you'd open your mind to

it. Are you brave enough to try?

746. A "Codeless Revolution?" Not Yet

Although it's only been a dozen days since the rules changed, there doesn't seem to be a flood of new growth yet.

On Feb 22, 2007, the last day of the old rules,
there were 654,680 current, unexpired FCC-issued amateur radio licenses held by individuals. Of those, 324,326 were held by Techs and Tech Pluses.

On Mar 05, 2007, there were 654,265 current, unexpired FCC-issued amateur radio licenses held by individuals. That's a drop of 415. Of those, 322,461 were held by Techs and Tech Pluses.

Looks like, so far, the main result of the rules changes has been upgrades rather than new hams.

Yep, it is. It was filed by mail because Len couldn't get ECFS to work for him back then.

Len did not file any Comments to 98-143 at all.
Len only filed Reply Comments to KH6HZ's Comments - even though KH6HZ supported the NCI
position on Morse Code testing.

(That 1998 position
was to eliminate all testing except the 5 wpm required to meet the old treaty, and to include a sunset clause that would automatically eliminate the 5 wpm test if/when the treaty no longer required it.)

Why Len would use the FCC comment system to argue with someone who supported elimination of all Morse Code testing at the earliest possible date remains a mystery. Perhaps he could not control his actions....

Reply to Comments are only supposed to be rebuttals of others' comments. They are not supposed to include any subjects not already discussed - that's what Comments are for. Len did not file any Comments to 98-143 at all.

Yet in Len's Reply Comments he proposed that the FCC add a new, arbitrary and completely unnecessary minimum age requirement of 14 years to the rules, so that no class of amateur radio license could be issued to anyone under that age.

There has never been a minimum-age requirement for a US amateur radio license, and to date Len has not been able to come up with a single instance of problems caused by the lack of such a requirement.

We don't disagree on the subject that much Len, however, the internet is an EXCELLENT place to use for knowledge, I just want to keep on top of dismiss and defame it.

And, I think the point I made is most important, it is all how a person

Yanno, sexual freaks just bother me. They bother me much as a person suffering from a mental disorder which gives them the feeling that "every on in the world is out to get them. Or, such as those who smear feces on their bodies. Or, those who talk with themselves and other little/imaginary friends as they go through the world."

I simply don't what the silliness around me or having to put up with it. If they take it into private and don't harass, disturb or bother others around them, fine.

Prejudice? No, I just want the idiots disrupting others as they go about their battle to have the insane accepted in society ...

REQUEST FOR DISCUSSION (RFD) UNmoderated group rec.radio.amateur.moderated.whinewhine-whine

This is a formal Request For Discussion (RFD) for the creation of the UNmoderated Usenet newsgroup, rec.radio.amateur.moderated.whine-whinewhine.

NEWSGROUPS LINE: rec.radio.amateur.moderated.whine-whine-whine

rec.radio.amateur.moderated.whine-whine.whine Whining about why postings are rejected from rec.radio.amateur.moderated (Unmoderated)

RATIONALE: rec.radio.amateur.moderated.whine-whine-whine rec.radio.amateur.moderated.whine-whine-whine is an unmoderated version of rec.radio.amateur.moderated. The rec.radio.amateur.moderated newsgroup is chartered to discuss anything

related to amateur radio. As a moderated newsgroup, the moderation team first reviews the posting and then allows it to pass to the moderated newsgroup upon approval.

Typically when an author has a posting rejected by the rec.radio.amateur.moderated moderation team, the author immediately spams the remaining rec.radio.amateur.* newsgroups with the original post, copy of the rejection notice, and a rant about how "unfair" the moderation team is.

Creating rec.radio.amateur.moderated.whine-whine-whine will provide a centralized newsgroup for whining and make it easier for complainers to form a support-group for their victimization at the hands of the rec.radio.amateur.moderated moderation team. Such a newsgroup will allow them to feel empowered against the oppression imposed upon them by the rec.radio.amateur.moderated moderators.

In addition, rec.radio.amateur.moderated.whine-whine-whine will provide an outlet by which Abnormal Psychology PhD candidates can select candidates for their case studies in paranoia. Abnormal psychology studies persistent, abnormal, and irrational fears of a specific thing (such as rec.radio.amateur.moderated) or situation (a rejected posting to rec.radio.amateur.moderated) that compels one to avoid it, despite the awareness and reassurance that it is not dangerous.

CHARTER:

rec.radio.amateur.moderated.whine-whine-whine is for the whining related to rejected postings from rec.radio.amateur.moderated.

The following are examples of topical content:

* Reposting of messages rejected by the rec.radio.amateur.moderated moderation team, including the reason for said rejections, along with a line-by-line "rebuttal" of the rejection.

* Whining about how the moderators in rec.radio.amateur.moderated are 'biased' because they all have amateur extra class amateur radio licenses.

* Complaints of "censorship"

* Claims of how the rec.radio.amateur.moderation moderators are 'out to get you' or have threatened to murder you.

MODERATION POLICY: rec.radio.amateur.moderated.whine-whine-whine

None. This is an UNmoderated newsgroup.

Yea, sure your right, nature and medical professionals are all wrong.
So I guess when your born and the physician looked a your genitals and announced that you were a male he was all wrong, and those Y chromosomes you have were also a big mistake.

CaIl what you want, but IMO if you remove it you still have not changed gender. DNA tells the truth. You can't escape your chromosomes no matter how bad you would like.

The real issue with transgender men is they are just homosexuals who can't accept the fact that they are gay. Instead, they try to appease themselves by "changing genders", therefore believing that if they are now female, its ok to be attracted to men. Your better off just being gay instead of destroying your body.

So, you think we're sexual freaks? I'm curious what you base that less than "analytical" opinion on? Do you have some ingrained fear of stuff you don't understand? Do you believe that "mental disorders" somehow are infectious and that you might catch something? And just exactly what makes you believe that being transgendered is a mental disorder?
Something from the '60's perhaps? You call it silliness but offer no reasoning behind why you consider it that. And, oh, by the way, prejudice is exactly what it is. It's prejudging people based on feelings or insufficient or erroneous information. You say you don't want "idiots" disrupting others but every time you make a request you disrupt someone else who may very well consider you an idiot, and you say you don't want the "insane" accepted into that society so who cares for those you consider insane? Or would you just callously lock them up and let them rot? And what professional credentials do you have that allows you to make a determination about the mental health or mental state of someone else? As you can see, I feel you have neglected to think this through. What you may do to exclude someone else from society may by a third person be used to exclude you from society based on their prejudices and feelings. It happens every day in law, government, and religion. Perhaps you need to lose some of your fear by getting to know some of the people you say you wish to exclude? If you dare. I wonder just how many other people consider you a problem in society? It's important to have a balanced perspective because what you say and do may come back to haunt you. You say you don't want to put up with them .. and that is your right.. but remember, intolerance for others works both ways. Someone may just want to put you away some day too.

rotfl!

I doubt it unless he's John Holmes size.

I had a drag queen friend once and he said that's what he did and you could never tell. I looked him over good when he was dolled up.

He wouldn't answer me though when I asked if he ever started to get a boner when he was taped down. You'd think a guy could burst a vessel if that happened.

Why does someone always have to die. I also forgot to say that a lot of transgender types seem to harbor a lot of hostility and anger. Nevertheless, you still can't change your chromosomes, if you have Y chromosomes you are male. You can dress, act, have operations, and do anything else that is common practice for the opposite sex. However, you can't get around your DNA. Maybe someday technology will even allow reassigment of DNA with replication/exchange of chromosomes without termination of the subject, and then there will be gender reassigment, but until that day arrives, your are the sex that your DNA dictates.

This thread is also appearing in rec.radio.amateur.policy, apparently because someone who wanted to stir things up crossposted to both groups intentionally. I have redirected followups to soc.s.t. and ask anyone

Look Markie, if I have done something illegal call the law or STFU about what I do with my blog. But FYI, Lloyd already tried to have it removed without success (instead Lloyd removed himself from the groups completely), and you also indicated on an earlier comment that if blogger followed its own rules my blog would be removed, indicating that you probably complained and got a negative response to your whining. Nevertheless, honestly it is just really, really sad that you can't recognize that your behavior on here is totally inappropriate. Look at your posting behavior, you just posted multiple times in the last 10 minutes to this one thread trying to play catch up to answer each and every comment. By the end of this evening you probably will have posted over 50 times to the NG, really bizarre behavior.

See Mark, I post something on topic in response to JP's thread and you have to come on this thread and start your attack, and then you whine when someone jumps on you. Please don't try to make this thread all about you. We see enough of that already.

As have many of us over the years. Remember the tape where Leila Heil knocked on his front door, making him run and hide in a closet like a coward? The bottom line is that Roger lisps when he tries to cover his timidity up when he is on the air. That's how he got the name "Woger" from the other hams who used to hear him jamming on 20M while lisping furiously about an Ohio ham named Steve Tunder.

Something just ain't right about that Woger.

COMPARISON OF APPLICATIONS OF VECS FROM FCC SEARCH

Based on use of the FCC's own Search engine on their website on the 13th day of no code test for US radio amateurs, the following tabulations show the 14 VEC's activity from 24 Feb to 7 Mar 07:

ALL actions	NEW	%, New
VEC and classes	Licensees	to All
Milwaukee RA Club, Inc	52	9 17.3
Laurel AR Club, Inc	242	24 9.9
Anchorage ARC	37	9 24.3
ARRL/VEC	3,055	614 20.1
W4VEC	110	8 7.3
Greater LA AR Group	13	6 46.2
Sunnyvale VEC ARC Inc	43	0 0
W.Carolina AR Soc/VEC, Inc	209	32 15.3
Golden Empire AR Soc	16	1 6.3
Central America VEC Inc	1	0 0
W5YI-VEC	887	178 20.1
MO-KAN VE Coordinator	22	5 22.7
Sandarc-VEC	46	6 13.0
Jefferson AR Club	0	0 0

Total, All 14 VECs 4,233 892 21.1

Total FCC Actions 7,121 937 13.2

A starting date of 24 Feb rather than 23 Feb was chosen to allow application processing from the 22nd and before to be done. That would cause skewed comparisons between coded and non-coded testing. However, skew still occurs due to slow mail delivery to the VEC Hqs and their processing for input to the FCC. For that reason a new time period was begun on Wednesday, 28 Feb to Wednesday, 7 March to provide more isolation of code-test period processing:

ALL actions	NEW	%, New
VEC and classes	Licensees	to All
Milwaukee RA Club, Inc	0	0 0
Laurel AR Club, Inc	157	17 10.8
Anchorage ARC	34	9 26.5 *
ARRL/VEC	2,505	434 17.3
W4VEC	37	2 5.4
Greater LA AR Group	0	0 0

Sunnyvale VEC ARC Inc 8 0 0
W.Carolina AR Soc/VEC, Inc 82 19 23.2
Golden Empire AR Soc 16 1 6.3 *
Central America VEC Inc 1 0 0 *
W5YI-VEC 609 154 25.3
MO-KAN VE Coordinator 22 5 22.7 *
Sandarc-VEC 21 3 14.3
Jefferson AR Club 0 0 0 *

Total, All 14 VECs 3,492 892 25.6

Total FCC Actions 4,894 644 13.2

* Unchanged from first tally

A one-week period is still too soon to see much of a trend or change in activity, primarily due to (usual) monthly periods of VEC testing sessions; some may skip the Friday, 23 Feb no-code-test start but others may have added a testing session during or shortly after the 23 Feb date. Note that the Greater Los Angeles Amateur Radio Club got nearly 1 out of 2 as NEW during the 4-day interval between starting dates of each tabulation.

In essence, the tabulations show (for bigger VECs) mostly license modifications, class upgrades as the major activity. New licensees are about one-quarter or less of all test session results; this seems on-par with prior testing.

Some, namely Dee Flint, have claimed that the ARRL/VEC does "new licensee processing first." There is no real proof of this since a breakdown of actions resulting from their VE team testing for 28 Feb to 7 Mar show the following:

Activity (from FCC) Total Percentage of 3,055
---------- ----- ----------
Administrative Update 48 1.6
Duplicate License 11 0.4
Modification 2,028 66.4
Renewal/Modification 81 2.7
Renewal Only 273 8.9
NEW 614 20.1

4 out of 5 test session items are either modifications, renewals or class upgrade testing. The FCC Application Search site does not differentiate "modifications" as to address or name changes versus license class changes without a much more detailed examination of individuals.

It should be noted that there is NO sign of the ARRL/VEC having processed the 25 Feb local ARRL VE team (N6ZZK, KD6PLU, W6LPJ, KF6UXT) paperwork from about 16 individuals at Old Fire House 77 in the 91352 ZIP area

(Sun Valley, CA.) as of the 10th day after that Sunday afternoon test session. This is the age of computers and FAXs and direct submittal from VECs to the FCC electronically. It was 12 days from my First 'Phone test completion in 1956 to receipt of my license certificate, all carried by the postal service and no such "computer processing" as is available now. 51 years later, the "system" has no more streamlining now despite a supposed "faster response" than before.

Plenty of Morse Code Tested Generals, Advanced, and Extras have had their health records closed by amplifiers and towers. And Mark has

802. Change in ARS numbers Pool

Now that the first couple of weeks have gone by does anyone else want to add a guess?

1) Predict amount of change in ARS numbers between the IMPLEMENTATION date (2/23/07) of the R&O for elimination of code testing and one year from
that
date (2/23/08).
2) Calculation of the number of licenses will be done by N2EY under the same principals that he uses now to calculate the number of licenses.
3) You must select whole numbers for your percentage.
4) You may select positive or negative percentages.
5) You may select a range but that range may not exceed a total of 4%.
Note that your average will be used to determine who is closest. If the actual change is outside the range of everyone's guesses then the person whose limit is closest will be the winner.
6) You must submit your guess no later than six months after the
IMPLEMENTATION date of the R&O, which would be 8/23/07.

Anyone else? Note if your guess doesn't show up on the list within a week, it may mean that my ISP is blocking it. However, I've temporarily cleared out my blocked senders list so if anyone has been wanting to put in a guess
and hasn't been able to, now is the time.

Guesses submitted:
N8UZE: 1% less to 1% more
N2EY: 1% more to 2% more
KH6HZ: 1% less to 0% change
N3KIP: 2% more to 6% more
KH6O: 6% more to 10% more
KK6J: 12% more to 14% more
KC2HMZ: 5% more
K8BSG: 2% to 3% more

JS, "crow" is too good for them.

Good grief, everyone is making out like that amateur license test is a TEST. It isn't like a whole truckload of college exams I've taken. It was 120 questions, multiple-choice, done in three parts...on a Sunday afternoon in an old fire house now housing part of the Los Angeles Auxilliary Communications Service, managed by the LAFD. It was all of a mile and a half from my house, across from a food market (Ralphs - no apostrophe) where I've shopped for 43 years. Too bad it wasn't snowing or I would have taken off my shoes like them olde-tymers did. It is slightly downhill (by about 30 feet) to it, but it IS uphill coming back.

It wouldn't be so bad if there weren't all these sunsabishes waiting in the bushes to say I'm a "newbie, tyro, beginner, etc., etc. in radio." Jay-suss. They can't get a grip, can they?

Nah...business will return shortly to the usual in here... like in a few minutes...

I can say with certainty that I mailed my Feb 23rd materials on Saturday the 24th and all my applicants, both new licensees and upgraders showed in the FCC database on Feb 27. Since I used priority mail, it was almost certainly in the ARRL's hands on Monday, Feb 24. Perhaps I was lucky enough to beat the big surge of submittals and to be on top.

No sweat, Mark. I didn't wait two days. I was busy with other things that Friday and the ARRL/VEC exam session was for Sunday afternoon following. A quick call to confirm that and that was that.

Sad to say, I couldn't trudge barefoot through the snow, uphill both ways, like all them olde-tymers did. :-) [they had it soooooo 'tuff'] Just get in the car and drive a mile and a half down one major street to the fire house (now a unit of the LA Auxiliary Communication System), wait for 50 minutes while the VE team got themselves together, wait 10 to 15 minutes after one exam until all four VEs looked over my paperwork, checking and rechecking the score sheets. I'll say this for them, they are thorough in that team. Even inspected my old HP 32SII calculator to make sure it didn't have any crib sheets inside it. :-)

Okay on paying attention to your group. I'm just doubtiing that the ARRL VEC had the Big Deluge of mail that claimed (but did not quantify) on their website. That's one reason I did the tabulation from the FCC Search engine results that started
this thread.

Part of a "deluge" might have been from too many ARRL/VEC teams adding extra exams on Friday or Saturday, out of the usual monthly schedules (give or take).

I can understand those with CSCEs wanting to upgrade (although I don't know why 4 in my exam session thought they needed that to "modify" their Tech license to a Tech license under the new rules). :-(There were about 2 who just needed to change their mailing address, something which could have been done by mail or by computer directly...no charge. Judging by all the modifications (not an upgrade) and the renewals handled by the ARRL, those could have been done OUTSIDE the need for hand-holding the free paperwork process on relatively small tasks.

I'm thinking more of the usual "celebrity PR ploy" of the ARRL "becoming overworked." Not unusual PR tactic.
That kind of PR is done in this city all the time in the entertainment biz here.

No sweat on that, Mark. I did four test elements in 1956 for my First 'Phone in one sitting. Had to, Chicago was 90 miles away for me then. :-) On Sunday it was just a mile plus down one major street. :-)

A full California driver license exam is 50 multiple-choice questions. I've always passed those and have had that license for 50 years. College-level exams are much harder and not all are multiple choice. I've always regarded EVERY day at work to be a "test session" with NO "practice exams" to do in order to keep a paycheck coming in. Food and shelter are more important than any hobby activity...but some think they get basic survival benefits "automatically." :-( about the fact I did not have to go through the same hazing ritual he did

at this point Hoesntly I don't how to service the amp in question. the reason in my case is I don't own one. ifI aquire one I either get with a service manual or go looking for service info

I know enough. I know poking aroing in an amp is dangerous without futh knowledge

John,

So your message was rejected because the thread was closed.... I don't see a problem with that.

If you do, please appeal the decision and it will be reviewed by the board, who are not involved in any of the day to day moderation decisions.

It was hot coffee and sweet rolls! "Old Fire House 77" is part of the L.A. Auxiliary Communications Service partly managed by the LAFD. There was also a group of that LA Aux that was meeting about something in another room so there was a nice spread for everyone. :-) I had one sweet roll, skipped the coffee in all the "excitement"! Har! I don't like most of the huge coffee makers' coffee, usually too weak (depending on the preparer). There was tea also plus de-caf for those needing something else. If worst came to wurst, I could have walked across the street to a large Ralphs supermarket and gotten something. :-)

Not if one is a moderator. :-(

Try understanding that not everyone is a daily participant in any newsgroup. They may be absent for several days.
Those non-daily participants MAY have something cogent and meaningful about a discussion topic. A solution to the "closed thread" could be a simple posting that a particular thread has been closed by "the moderators."

Such a message does NOT have to be the multi-screen multi-quote and link-full messages usually sent. Let's not waste any more time for anyone with all this very-NON-instant messaging.

I've been a participant in computer-modem communications for 23 years on BBSs, private networks, and the Internet carried "usenet" newsgroups. Yes, I've also been a moderator on some large local BBSs and know what it is like. You WILL get angry denunciations from the dissatisfied. TS. The skin MUST grow tough and thick to do the job.

Now there is a "board" of moderators...more likely one has their "turn in the barrel" for a day, checking up on content.
If the "board" wanted to do a good job, go out on PATROL;
i.e., roam the territory and, if something irritates them, try sending warning messages privately, then publicly. It is better than simply "closing the doors" and not saying anything to anyone in public.

> If you do, please appeal the decision and it will be reviewed by the > board, who are not involved in any of the day to day moderation
> decisions.

The "board" ought to get its act together as a unit...work on this "moderation" as a cohesive unit, not a disparate collection of individuals relying on some (unknown) program "robocop" checking out the post content of those NOT on the "white list," sending out private e-mail notices, and generally wasting time with all this "appeals" busy work which can take days.

What we've got is a fine medium for written comms to spread at the speed of light but a bunch of overseers busy with overkill on content so that days and days pass along with extreme interruption of a thread subject.

Now, if the "moderators" can't tell the difference between middle-school machismo sex talk along with personal insult and invective compared with heated discussion on polarized subject threads...just give up. I don't think all the "organized officialdom pontification" is going to do its job effectively. Unless "effective" is a re-definition of one-sided, nice-nice group think that is far from DISCUSSION as it can get. George Orwell had a point with both novels "Animal Farm" and "1984."

On "moderation" I've been there, got lots of T-shirts, wore out a few. The "moderated newsgroup" idea is nice only in theory but, in practice, it is just trying to re-invent a wheel...one that has lots of flat sections on it. That's been done before and hasn't worked well.
The "board" may be an innovation but all those "appeals"
are just time-wasting busy work. Think about it.

You mean he was not told this in "advance" because the e-mail he quoted clearly says that the thread was closed and that was why his post was automatically rejected. Which is part of what I didn't snip out of the original message.

I don't understand what "insult" you are talking about. Closing a thread is a valid moderation decision when the thread starts drifting off the original poster's topic. This does cause the rejection of otherwise acceptable posts automatically, which is what seems to be the case here but that does not mean it's improper.

Again, review by the board is the method posters can use to effect changes in the moderation practice and force better coordination in the policy used by all the moderators. Individually we are not above making mistakes or having differences of opinion about what is acceptable but we can and do discuss various decisions that are close to the line. We routinely discuss these issues as a group and we routinely are asking each other about posts that are considered questionable.

So.. If you think something was rejected for a bad reason.. Try to edit your submission and make it acceptable, use the appeals process or simply move on and forget it.

To be fair to John, though, it would appear the thread was only alive for 2 days. The first post on 3/4 at 12:49, the last post 3/6 1:07pm.

Is 49 hours a legitimate amount of time to allow a thread to be alive in any newsgroup, given USENET message propagation characteristics?

I would probably side with John on this one, personally. Unless you're talking about a thread which has a certain timeliness (i.e. announcing a special event this weekend and it is currently Thursday) it would seem a thread should be open for discussion longer than 49 hours.

I suppose you can claim bias because I'm a moderator... Even if it's not true, how do you go about disproving that charge? :)

I'll take that as a valid suggestion, that we post a message to the thread that says it is closed to further posting. I'll bring that up to the group and see what they say.

Don't think my feathers are ruffled here. I too have been involved in BBS activities for over two decades and had multiple fido-net nodes over the years. I do care that constructive critics are listened to, but I'm not offended when somebody disagrees with me.

Well, this is not how our policy works from your point of view. There is no way you could tell if the board is actively looking at the individual moderation decisions or not. I can assure you that the moderation software keeps logs, and the logs are being reviewed by the board on a regular basis. We have had regular discussions about decisions that where considered "border line" though just this avenue.

However, if you feel a decision was improper, we have provided you a means of calling a specific event to their attention. That is the point of the appeals process.

So you would propose that we handle every message on the group one at a time though a single filter? I'm sorry, but that is not very workable in the real world. We are trying to maintain a reasonable discussion with a minimum of delay and what you propose might cause very large delays in getting posts approved. We decided that it was more important to be timely and depend upon a group of moderators making individual decisions. What you propose is a group of moderators debating every choice every time. Automation has it's limits and problems, I won't argue that point, but it's much better than doing this all by hand and having to deal with the delays involved with doing it that way.

Well I have only one T-Shirt and one Hat for my past efforts.... And we have thought about this quite a lot as a group. I'm satisfied that we have a reasonable compromise on how we are going about this. Is it perfect? Perhaps not, but what human endeavor is? We are open to suggestions on how to improve, and over time we surely will if we keep trying.

No one can "disprove" an unseen "charge." It is a matter of OPINION that some do not like a particular system.

It could be a simple posting of just "closed." Takes up the least space, even with a short message of why it was closed.

No sweat on that here. FIDO was a good training ground for some inordinately-dissatisfied posters.

The "invisibility" of the current moderation process is what bothers many, including myself. I don't care how long a message is about the moderation process, all that such a message says is rather boilerplate PR to me. I've seen enough of that kind of "justification" from many sources and just hang a tag on it that says "Politics as Usual."

One moderator, one quick action is what I CAN understand.

> However, if you feel a decision was improper, we have provided you a

And that can take days to resolve. That newsgroup is NOT a Court. Reach a decision and do it quickly, heated tempers will cool down faster and things return to normal (whatever that is) quickly.

"I proposed that?" Not quite. As I said, one moderator and one action. The way I see it is a "moderated" group IS moderated and, if that means to you each message reviewed, then so be it. To have SOME on a "non-moderated" basis in a "white list" of "pre-approved" posters will obviously invite the accusations of elitism.

Since practicality of volunteerism MUST be considered, a group is necessary. But, the spectre of a moderator getting away from desired goals is ever-present. What is the check-and-balance for moderators? Any? If all they lose is some self-defined Status, that isn't much of a penalty.

> <Snip the Orwell referance..>

As you wish. I found it quite significant...and I was never a member of SWINE (Students Wildly Indignant about Nearly Everything) nor a draft-dodging rationalizer hoping for no draft call in the 60s (I'd already served my time in northeast Asia). One MUST be ever-watchful of "authority." Not to actively distrust them, but be WARY.

That, too, is a human trait and gave rise to another little homily: Power corrupts, absolute power corrupts absolutely.

I'm still waiting for this Perestroika, the "openness" to happen in the moderation "human endeavor." I don't see a trace of it yet.

Color me skeptical if you will.

Another bad guess, Woger. The real Lloyd Davies is packing up to drive over to his fiancee's city and get married this weekend.

That's why he's changing his life around. He finally fell in love and is getting married. He's clearing the decks so that he can devote his full attention to his new wife (and his new life).

In the meantime, a tape of one of your old 20M QSOs has been making the rounds as an mp3 file, and it definitely proves that you have a lisp. Look for a download link for it to appear on the net some time soon.

Cheers!

I was told by one of the moderators that there seems to be some type of issue that causes this rejection when the thread gets too long or too deeply nested.

I've suggested that they have it autopost a final message when a thread is closed so that we know to simply start anew.

No, it has everything to do with drugs, you addict. It also has everything to do with how fucked in the head you are. And why you molest and sodomize little boys and got caught for it.

Mark Morgan,

I do have a life and I did not start this thread. Your like the kid in the sixth sense, "I see dloyd everywhere"

Why don't you get a life, spend a little less time on here, and stop accusing me of starting every thread.

Most groups had no reason to schedule a special session. Unless there's someone with a CSCE about to expire, it's a lot of work to find a site, make sure your team is available and get the word out for a specially scheduled session. There was another team in this area that was also planning to hold a Feb 23rd session but they could not get a facility scheduled so they ended up not conducting a special session.

I've never called a leader of a VE team a liar. Unless, that is, you're the leader of a VE team.

I'm sure. Sounds like Mork demanded the VE Team hold a special session just for him.

If I were a VE, I wouldn't hold a session for anyone (nor do I think you can under the rules, from what I recall, sessions are open to anyone).

I'd schedule sessions like I normally would, and tell Mork he can attend one of those.

when off-line. :-) [like Never will I do that...]

All I need now is an antenna or two, transmitter(s) or transceiver(s) and a whole lotta other stuff. I feel like
"The Six Million Dollar Ham"..."we have the technology, we can build him a station, bigger and better than before..." [hmmm...might be a TV series idea there!]

You must be going nuts now that Lloyd has left the Internet. (Oops!
Correction: you already are nuts.)

What I should have said is that you must be feeling out of sorts now that your favorite stalkee is unavailable. You need to look at the bright side: You still have Mark Morgan.

Unfortunately for you, you can't get the last word in with Mark, no you failed miserably, because Mark is a gauche master while you are still only a faltering beginner.

Hardly!

It took him OVER SIXTY YEARS to get this far! And they had to scrap 3 code tests and two written tests to do it!

Lennie's been missing and falling for almost a decade that I've "known" him, and it took him this long to do what he said he'd do
seven years ago.

Yeah, Lennie...Make room...Now that this hurdle has been overcome, I am sure it won't be long before Brain get's his wish and we further gut the written exams, too.

However, I did say you'd never get the license, but here you are.
It's a welfare license, but printed on the same FCC Form 660 as mine.
Congratulations.

Well, Leonard, after the several decades of declared interest in amateur radio, the more than ten decades of posts to this newsgroup, over seven years of time elapsed since your boast of an "Extra right out of the box", you've obtained an amateur radio license. You waited for the smoke to clear and for the dreaded five word per minute Morse test to disappear. Now you're a brand new radio amateur.

As a beginner in ham radio, I hope you'll use these first months to develop and polish your operating skills. I hope you'll take time to apply for ARRL membership now that you may join as a full member.

Try to stay away from the wrong crowd--the kind of guy who would write something like, "Gee Lennie, they all wanna kiss your backside". No one is going to to anything like that for you any more than it was done for anyone first licensed decades ago. You'll have to earn the respect of others.

Keep us apprised of your progress. Let us know if you decide to start chasing states or countries or turn in a particularly good contest score. Don't think it can't happen. You need only look at Carl Stevenson to see what the HF fever can do to an individual.

Several points, Morkie...

First of all, FCC Rules and Regulations require that a VE team consist of three unrelated (to the applicant) members. According to QRZ, I find less than 2 dozen licensed Amateurs within 20 miles of you. You're shacked up with one of them, but in any case he's only a Technician and ineligible to test you anyway.

Secondly, the VE team members must be of at least equal licensure to the level being TESTED FOR...Not already in-hand. That means that only SEVEN of those number were even ELIGIBLE to be VE's to test you to the level of General, and only ONE of those persons holds an Extra, so no matter what, you'd have to drive somewhere to get above General.

Thirdly, even if you're only 1/10th the putz in person that you are in this forum, I can only guess at why they didn't want to hold a special session for you! In any case, I am willing to bet that word's gotten out about you due to your archived behaviour here and they are laughing behind your portly backside at this moment.

That having been said and since you've now indicated that the snow is obvioulsy abated enough to drive to a VE session...How's-a-bout that HF antenna, fatboy...?!?! Got it up yet? You've avoided answering why you lied about an existing HF antenna before and are now using the weather as an excuse for not getting on the air. (...as if we need to wonder why you LIED again...)

That's a nice CW call, Lennie.

Ironic, huh...?!?!

I think it was a minor screw-up on the "decades of posts to this newsgroup", Dave, but considering that there's almost 20,000 posts under any one of 12 screen names that I've seen, that was an easy mistake to make...

And yep, Lennie's a brand new Amateur...A novice in the ranks despite the lack of a current license by that title...but a novice nonetheless.

Real impressive endeavor, too...Over 60 years gone by since his first "interest"...They scrapped three code tests and two writtens in order to get it down to his level. Very impressive for an "engineer" of his caliber. (Uh oh! I said 'caliber' ! Now they'll jump on me for allegedly threatening them again! Oh dear me!)

> As a beginner in ham radio, I hope you'll use these first months to

He'll no doubt wait until the ARRL and the IEEE merge and his "lifetime membership" in IEEE is grandfathered to a League membership.

And considering that Lennie has insulted and villanized just about every Amateur Radio group, organization, program, etc, there is more than enough reason to believe that Lennie's license will go unconsummated for some time to come. Who'd WANT to talk to him? Of course he can go straight to a MARS membership and never radiate a miliwatt of RF on an allocated Amateur band.

Hmmmmmmmm...See Lennie on the DXCC or WAS rolls anytime soon..?!?! It took him over 60 years to get licensed...I hope you're not holding your breath, Dave!

Hardly!

It took him OVER SIXTY YEARS to get this far! And they had to scrap 3 code tests and two written tests to do it!

Lennie's been missing and falling for almost a decade that I've "known" him, and it took him this long to do what he said he'd do
seven years ago.

Yeah, Lennie...Make room...Now that this hurdle has been overcome, I am sure it won't be long before Brain get's his wish and
we further gut the written exams, too.

However, I did say you'd never get the license, but here you are.
It's a welfare license, but printed on the same FCC Form 660 as mine.
Congratulations.

So...How long will it be before we ever hear you actually on the air? Another decade?

986. How Long Does It Take KB9RQZ To Re-Label Posts to "Just Another Stalking Thread"...?!?!

An intersting question, even if I only ask myself...Present KB9RQZ practice is to re-label ANY thread "just another stalking thread" within 3 posts.

I will give him credit for one thing, though...He invited the paperboy in long enough to get him to re-type "stlaking" for him so when he cut's-and-pastes he doesn't look COMPLETELY moronic EVERY time!

I wonder who took his General class written for him...? No doubt the REAL reason behind his "...being so tired" from his VE trip. I am sure he could get "Gav" to only do so much in ONE trip to the VE...

Maybe "Gav" will upgrade his license locally...afterall, he probably doesn't have the same reasosns to be ashamed to show his face in public as Morkie does.

As opposed to YOUR crimes, Morkie?

Child endangerment.

Elder abuse.

Misrepresenting one's self as a federal officer.

Lying to federal officers.

Misrepresenting one's military service.

There's no threat, fatboy...Never was, never will be. There may be some things in this world that I would consider important enough to jeopardize my freedom for, but offing a fool like you is NOT one of them!

Try as you might, there's no "threat" in anything I have siad to you.

I do note, however, that N0IMD and AF6AY have both jumped on the More Morkie Mularkie bandwagon by trying to quote out of text and then make a "threat" out of it.

If there was ever evidence of paranoia, Morkie's "in the even of my death" blog has GOT to be one of the toppers!

It's not an "outrageous claim", Morkie.

Confusing Morkie with facts will only make him more outrageous and livid.

POSSIBLY...?!?!?

Morkie's the discreditied one.

Witness his mistruths about military service, faked Amateur logs, his gay marraige, insistence that teaching children to lie is a positive parental role model, etc...

Morkie's already been under psychiatric care, per his own admission.

In more than one state, it appears.

There is.

The problem is supervising the patient adequately until the medications can begin to provide resolution and the patient realizes that the medication really is in their best interests.

No doubt Morkie's move tom the Michigan UP was an attempt to dodge such supervision.

He won't. At least not without a court order to do so.

You mean "stupid, juvenile emotional baggage "come back" like the one YOU just used, YTour Putziness?

There was nothing emotional or non-factual stated.

YOU stated that you were going to get your "extra lite right out of the box".

The FACTS are that you lied. You let the box lay around, get moldy, and then complained about the roaches it was attracting.

You mean that folks kept whining until they finally caved in and gutted the service. And I am not speaking solely about the Code test, Your Sliminess. You waited it out for a total of three different code test AND two writtens.

Pretty lame, Mr 14-Years-Of-Night-School-To-Be-An-Engineer.

Well...it only took him seven years from his "right out of the box" claim to do so, but Lennie Anderson has joined the ranks of LICENSED Amateurs!

And in doing so, FINALLY lived up to ONE of his not-so-subtle suggestions that he was going to "do something" related to actually getting an Amateur license. It's only been a decade since we first "met" and he insinuated impending licensure.

I said he'd never do it, but here I am proven wrong...I stand corrected.

Now let's see how long it takes him to actually get on the air...His buddie in Michigan hasn't got the nads to make a schedule on the air...Let's see if Lennie can live up to any of that rear-area radio mechanic war hero rhetoric and face his fears....

Who is defaming you? I started this thread about the moderated group,you hijacked MY thread, and you took it off topic. Everything that Ihave posted is based upon my view and observation of the posts on hereand responses to specific posts. If you don't like it, you can take aquarter and call someone who cares. If a law has been broken, call the law. You know what law has beenbroken, none. And who has forged a name. Dloyd Lavies is my pen name, many authorshave pen names, it is legal. Don't try to play lawyer, it is apparentthat you have no legal training whatsoever because you throw acusitorylegal terms around without knowing the implications of such terms.

> you do not enage in on topic post that is a violation of neNG policy

You are blabbering something about a violation of NG policy, but yourfumble fingers has made it unreadable, but I will address one policyviolation issue, which is your excessive posting. Your excessive posting is a violation of Google Groups Policy, because if you posted directly into the group instead of a news server and using all of your different names, you access to post would be limited. It is apparent that you post using one name until you are suspended, then you startusing another, just to flood the group with your posts.

Google Groups Help Center
Is there a limit on how often I can post?

Yes, there are a few ways in which posting frequency is limited. One limits the number of messages posted to a single group within a shortperiod of time. If that limit is reached, posting to that group will be frozen temporarily and you'll be instructed to post again later.

Another limits the number of messages a single user can post via email in a short period of time. If that limit is reached, your posting account will be disabled. If your account has been disabled, you can click the "contact us" link below and request that your account be reactivated. We'll review your request, and let you know what we decide.

We may also limit the number of messages a single user or computer can post via our website in a short period of time. If that limit is reached, posting will be frozen temporarily and you'll be instructed to post again later.

Please note, we are unable to provide the exact numbers that trigger these posting limits as the limits are subject to change.

These limits are to protect the users of our service and their email accounts, our groups, and the Usenet community from poorly configuredauto-responders, spammers, robots, trolls, and thread hijacking.

What blood, you would be on your knees in about a 10 seconds withontany blood at all. I saw your photo, no problem. The goal is to applya lot of pain without any residual evidence of such force. Many law enforcement agencies and federal employers, such as my former, provide excellent training in the application of these techniques. But of course, this requires me to actually touch you, but you appear to be way too filthy and dirty that I would ever want to touch your. Doever take a bath? I bet LLoyd is cleaner than you.

nope. indeed I don't have to wait for the first blow to land,althought that would be safer legaly

Sure Markie, that defense would not stand a chance in any district or judical circuit in the US, even in the 8th circuit.Like I said, it is apparent that you have no legal training whatsoever.

>not the case in Michigan

Actually, Michigan is one of the more liberal circuits, you better have significant evidence to warrant justifiable homicide. The courts would put you away forever if you try to say "oh he was giving me a hard time on the internet after I #### on everyone's postings, and I was scared, so I killed him even though he had no weapons. You aresuch an idiot.

On the OTHER hand, I see YOU once-again suggested the use of deadly force where no iminent threat of bodily harm existed.

THAT is a felony IN MICHIGAN, Fatboy.

Tell ya what, Fatboy...Why don't you create 4 or 5 more of these "blogs" alleging that yet another person is threating your life again...?!?!

Well...Acutally he can't REALLY be a "bisexual Jew" since Judiasm, like Christianity, casts non-heterosexual behaviour as a sin. He can be a bisexual person who practices Jewish tenants, but he can't BE a "Jew" if he's not going to live by the tenants of the faith anymore than one can be a police officer that robs banks.

uses? I hope so. That guys one mean muhtha

BTW Marcus, you might want to review your terminolgy. Stalking is not something done in such an in your face method Maybe you can come up with another pathetic little whine

BTW, forwarded your complaints about the lack of testing to you local VEC.
I'm sure they'll now rush to allow you to test.

Is there a lot of money made to be a professional victim? If so, you must be rolling in the bucks.

I'm still waiting for the name and email address of the DA so I can drop him a note and ask for a copy of the note he sent to Mork regarding the definition of stalking. I'm sure he'll be happy to know he's being quoted in various internet discussion forums.

A Redlight review happens on every person's application.

It has to do with any debt collection, not illegal activities, etc.

Recall -- Firm Press Release

FDA posts press releases and other notices of recalls and market withdrawals from the firms involved as a service to consumers, the media, and other interested parties. FDA does not endorse either the product or the company. This listserv covers mainly Class I (life-threatening) recalls. A complete listing of recalls can be found in the FDA Enforcement Report at: http://www.fda.gov/opacom/Enforce.html

Flora Foods Recalls "Cerignola" Olives Because of Possible Health Risk
Contact:
Flora Foods
954-785-3100

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE -- Pompano Beach, FL -- March 8, 2007 -- Flora Foods of Pompano Beach, Florida, is recalling its 25oz jars of "Cerignola Olives" because they have the potential to be contaminated with Clostridium botulinum, a bacterium which can cause life-threatening illness or death. Consumers are warned not to use the product even if it does not look or smell spoiled.

Botulism, a potentially fatal form of food poisoning, can cause the following symptoms: general weakness, dizziness, double-vision and trouble with speaking or swallowing. Difficulty in breathing, weakness of other muscles, abdominal distension and constipation may also be common symptoms. People experiencing these problems should seek immediate medical attention.

The recalled "Cerignola" olives were distributed in Florida, Georgia and upstate New York in retail stores.

The product comes in a 25 oz, clear glass jar marked with LOT #G080 stamped on the label.

No illnesses have been reported to date in connection with this problem.

The potential for contamination was noted after routine testing found that the product had been underprocessed.

Distribution of the product has been suspended as FDA and the company continue their investigation as to the source of the problem.

Consumers who have purchased 25 oz jars of "Cerignola" olives are urged to return them to the place of purchase for a full refund. Consumers with questions may contact the company at 954-785-3100.

Cibo Specialty Foods Issues Nationwide Alert on Potential Botulism Risk Associated with Specific Lots from Eight Varieties of Dal Raccolto Brand Olives
Contact:
Mickey Colombo
718-967-6858

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE --March 6, 2007 -- Cibo Specialty Foods, a division of Colavita USA, L.L.C. of Linden, N.J., is voluntarily recalling the following olive products sold under the "DAL RACCOLTO" brand. Immediately stop using the product. Testing of the products in question has revealed that specific products had pH and water activity that exceed the levels necessary to control botulism. Therefore, with the knowledge of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, Cibo Specialty Foods is recalling:

a.. DAL RACCOLTO "Italian Colossal Olives," Lot G062, packed in 4.18 lb. glass jars.
b.. DAL RACCOLTO "Natural Cerignola Olives," Lot G062, packed in 4.18 lb. glass jars.
c.. DAL RACCOLTO "Black Cerignola Olives, " Lots G009 & G066, packed in 2.5 kg tins.
d.. DAL RACCOLTO "Red Cerignola Olives," Lot G046, packed in 4.18 lb. glass jars.
e.. DAL RACCOLTO "Green Cerignola Olives," Lot G062, packed in 4.18 lb. glass jars.
f.. DAL RACCOLTO "Baresana Olives," Lot G198, packed in 11 lb. plastic tubs.
g.. DAL RACCOLTO "Nocellara Olives," Lots G216 & G217, packed in 11 lb. plastic tubs.
h.. DAL RACCOLTO "Calabrese Olives," Lot G198, packed in 11 lb. plastic tubs.
Botulism, a potentially fatal form of food poisoning, can cause the following symptoms: general weakness, dizziness, double-vision and trouble with speaking or swallowing. Difficulty in breathing, weakness of other muscles, abdominal distension and constipation may also be common symptoms. People experiencing these problems should seek immediate medical attention.

The items are packed in 4.18 lb., 2.5 kg, and 11 lb. -size containers, and are sold primarily to the foodservice trade (e.g. restaurants, restaurant distributors and other foodservice institutions). Any establishments or individual consumers that may have purchased any of these products should discard them immediately even though the product may appear to be normal. You cannot tell if the product harbors botulism by sight, taste or smell.

This recall is precautionary; there have been NO reported cases of botulism from these products.

Distribution of these products have been suspended as FDA and the company continue their investigation.

For further information about the recall, please contact Mickey Colombo, Sales Manager at Cibo Specialty Foods at (718) 967-6858, or Joseph R. Profaci, V.P. of Colavita USA at (908) 862-5454.

And mine.

Have you decided what sort of rig and antenna you're going to use for your new ham radio shack? Assuming that your home is in an area that allows antennas. A simple dipole with a balun used with a modern transceiver that has an auto antenna tuner would be reasonable first setup. Later you can try fancier antennas and so on.

I took your advice Steve, I've have a hard copy of the entire thread that you quoted, just in case Markies mouth tries to over power his brain. I believe that Markie has taken the dysfunction of being an idiot to a whole new level, probably to never be surpassed by anyone.

Of course Mark will read this thread, hjack it, and change the title to "just another stalking thread", because his desperate plea for attention must be granted...

I take it you're suggesting that I take all of the ARRL advanced classes as a substitute for a single class that is focused on the body of knowledge that the exam tests for. At the urging of the VEs that ran my general exam I took the extra the same day. I didn't pass but I did get a sense of what the exam is testing for. I only recall two questions on digital circuits or logic. Should I really take an entire course for the sake of those two questions?

Tom,

Congrats on your new General!

A suggestion on the Extra written:

The entire question pool is available free-for-the-download at various sites.

Also, there are online practice exams at a number of sites, too.
They use the actual test Q&A, and will tell you which you get wrong and which you get right, so you know your strong points and where you need a bit more study.

If you (or anyone else here) are stumped by any of the questions or explanations, just ask me and I'll help out. Email or newsgroup, here or rec.radio.amateur.moderated.

Now we get to the root of the matter. Unless the rules have changed, a VE (with the exception of Extras) must have a license class higher than the exams they administer. Thus the General class licensee can only administer Tech class exams. To get above Tech, he would most likely have to drive somewhere else.

The Advanced and Extras can administer Tech & General Exams. The Extras can administer Tech, General, and Extra exams. If your data is correct on the number of licensees in the area, they could NOT have tested him for General unless there were also some Advanced class licensees around who were VEs. So it would seem that he asked for the impossible. No wonder they would not schedule an exam for him.

1) Predict amount of change in ARS numbers between the IMPLEMENTATION date (2/23/07) of the R&O for elimination of code testing and one year from
that
date (2/23/08).
2) Calculation of the number of licenses will be done by N2EY under the same principals that he uses now to calculate the number of licenses.
3) You must select whole numbers for your percentage.
4) You may select positive or negative percentages.
5) You may select a range but that range may not exceed a total of 4%.
Note that your average will be used to determine who is closest. If the actual change is outside the range of everyone's guesses then the person whose limit is closest will be the winner.
6) You must submit your guess no later than six months after the
IMPLEMENTATION date of the R&O, which would be 8/23/07.

Anyone else? Note if your guess doesn't show up on the list within a week, it may mean that my ISP is blocking it. However, I've temporarily cleared
out my blocked senders list so if anyone has been wanting to put in a guess
and hasn't been able to, now is the time.

Guesses submitted:
N8UZE: 1% less to 1% more
N2EY: 1% more to 2% more
KH6HZ: 1% less to 0% change
N3KIP: 2% more to 6% more
KH6O: 6% more to 10% more
KK6J: 12% more to 14% more
KC2HMZ: 5% more
K8BSG: 2% to 3% more
K4YZ: 1% less to 0% change <-- Added 3/9/07

As is usually the case, Mark's stories are veiled in 1/2 truths designed to attempt to paint himself as the "victim" of some massive conspiracy at the hands of code-tested amateur radio operators. The lengths to which he'll go to concoct these stories is truly amazing sometimes, and perhaps what is even more amazing is other participants in this forum (Brian and Lennie) actually stick up for him, simply due to their like-minded hatred of all things morse code in the ARS.

While all of this makes perfect sense to you and me, and is indeed the order of the testing hierarchy, methinks Mark will STILL somehow view himself to be the set-upon "victim". It may even further irritate Mark to learn that I am a VE, so thanks, Dee, for setting the record straight.

Tom, if you failed the Extra exam by two questions, then perhaps an entire course is worthwhile... And what would it hurt to have more knowledge than that minimum required to pass an exam? After all, it's what you do with your license that's important.

The Old-Timers felt that the ARS gave up a lot when the FCC reduced the Morse Code Exam to a single 5WPM (at 13-15WPM) exam. The ARRL struck back with any number of on-line courses to beef up the knowledge base of the service. I asked this very group if anyone had taken any of the courses... no positive responses. They already know everything. You admit that you don't, so perhaps a course would benefit you.

Good luck getting to Extra.

Dee was not validating Robesin's remarks. She was validating those of KH6HZ.
Read her post again. She was making a learned statement of fact. That KH6HZ did a little research and pointed out some of the issues with the numbers and classifications of Hams in Mark's immediate area could have been researched by anybody, even you. Steve merely voiced the findings and added to them.
In fact, Dee rightfully defended the VE's that Mark wrongfully accused of being "pro code", and who, according to Mark, refused him a test session.
Dee has a great amount of credibility. Mark has none. Dee has never misled or printed falsehoods in these groups. Mark has.

Go there??? Nah. He could have just used Hermann's PO Box.

I believe you have the attributions incorrect. Steve is the one who did the research and posted the information on the number of licensed hams in the area, not I.

Why would I? Is there another mailing going out to Mark's ham

Robesin adds nothing to the discussion except sexual inuendo and team? That IS news to me.

So who was this VE? What did he/she tell you about the discussion he had with Mark?

Dee is a cheerleader for Morse Code and the ARRL. That's known as "bias."

So has Robesin and Deignan. How many amateurs are in their "Hoods?" (Good luck on getting a valid address for Deignan.)

My apologies. I should have paid closer attention. Still, this hardly alters the facts as Dee presented them. Mark is NOT the victim as he so often presents himself to be. If there be any victims, it is the falsely accused VE's that Mark alluded to.

I didn't say that I missed by two questions. I said I only saw two questions on the exam that were related to digital circuits. I was wondering if it was worth taking the entire digital course to prepare for two questions. I'd like to get the license as soon as possible so that I can serve as a control operator on any frequency that might be useful for emergency services work. That is were my particular interest lies. I will be taking those courses once I have finished the Exam preparation. What I was hoping to find was a course that is focused on preparing for the Extra Class Exam.

But..but...it is OK for Mark to outright state that Steve's wife should have aborted their daughter?
And prove to us that Mark's alleged wife is of one gender or another. We have no proof that she is even his wife.

No biggie.

You are correct, however. As is usually the case, Mark likes to fill his posts with 1/2 truths in a lame attempt to blame morse code somehow for his continuing woes as a victim of life.

No, it's not. A night spent digesting a chapter or two on the subject area in the ARRL Handbook should be more than enough prep on the subject.

If the numbers presented earlier were correct, it would not matter if they were all VEs. They could not have tested Mark since only one of them held a license class higher than General. To conduct a General license exam, they must hold either an Advanced or Extra license.

My support of Morse code has no bearing on the number of VEs in Mark's area who are eligible to administer the General exam.

In retrospect, using the "cheerleader" descriptor thus presented, I could easily make a similar case that his no-code bias is glaringly obvious. Tit

It will be indeed interesting to see if Mark follows through and puts up at least a segment of wire so as to allow him to make his new Codeless General voice heard on the HF bands. So far, Mark has been unable to toss a short piece of wire over the branches on his alleged forty acres due to inclement weather, snow, or whatever the excuse du jour is. Even with high winds and snow, ice floes and glaciers, tornadoes and earthquakes, any Ham who has a piece of wire available and who has any semblence knowledge of the workings on an antenna can erect one...even within the confines of his own ten by ten living room.
Why is Mark stalling?

Oh, wait. I forgot. These hurdles are not his fault. Someone else is to blame. The weather, the selfish VE's. the ARRL, the need to be constantly On Guard here in the newsgroups while he defends himself....all of this as a whole stymies Poor Mark's endeavors. None of this is his fault, you see. He is the victim who is beset upon by a myriad of unseen forces, forces that "talk" to him in the quagmire of his misfiring mental processes.

Don't invite Mark to schedule a QSO. He will twist your invitation, as only a warped mind can do, into being a "stalking" threat. Mark is not quite right with the normal world...

To ascertain the facts.

Even if every single amateur in Mark's area were an accredited VE, there don't appear to bet enough who hold the FCC-required class of license to hold a VE session for him.

Then you need to read the appropriate FCC rules about the class of license required of a VE for a particular license class.

You obviously aren't up to speed on certain aspects of Part 97.

Mr. Cheese, you have just performed a textbook example of the classic "ad hominem" attack. N8UZE's opinion of Morse Code testing and/or ARRL has nothing whatsoever to do with the actual FCC rules about VE testing, yet you claim "bias" of some sort.

> > Mark has none. Dee has never misled > > or printed falsehoods in these groups. Mark has.
>
> So has Robesin and Deignan. How many amateurs are in their > "Hoods?" (Good luck on getting a valid address for Deignan.)

Another example from you. Try sticking to the fact that there simply aren't enough amateurs who hold the required licenses within 20 miles of Mark in order to hold a VE session for General or Extra. That's one of the downsides for choosing to live in an area with low population density.

It seems to me that an important point about VE testing has been missed in thise discussion - that of VEs being, well, "Volunteers".

VEs aren't paid, unless you count the refreshments and maybe some expenses. They have to do a lot of paperwork and legwork to set up, run and document a VE session, all on their own time.

Their amateur radio reputations and licenses are on the line
every time they do so.

Yet some unnamed VEs are being attacked and accused of bias simply because they didn't put on a special VE session for one amateur who chooses to live in a low-population-density area. Mark wanted VEs from outside his area to come to him, rather than he going to them, and blamed it all on them being "procode". As if there's something wrong with being in favor of Morse Code - not the test, the mode itself.

There was no requirement that any VEs put on special sessions because of the rules changes. They did so anyway, as a favor, not a requirement.

I am reminded of someone who accused certain VEs of "fraud" simply because they presided over the license testing of a young amateur, even though the accuser did not know of any real fraud, was not present at the VE session, and in fact had no evidence and did not know any of the people involved at all.

How about a little respect and thanks for the VEs?
They certainly deserve it.

AFAIK, "Mr. Cheese" is not a VE. Nor am I, or anyone posting to this thread except N8UZE.

So I'll say "THANK YOU" to Dee, and all VEs who help with the licensing process. And all who have done so for more than 20 years, since the FCC abdicated the responsibility of testing for amateur radio licenses.

Without those Volunteer Examiners, there would be no possibility of the so-called "Revolution".

And I'll put my first name and call on this post.

What has this to do with amateur radio policy?

It's none of your business. None of Robesin's business either.

No, we have Robesin making accusations. I'd like to know which VE he talked to and got this information.

I could care less how many amateurs have to suffer with those two on

He made other errors and accusations, i.e., "You're shacked up with one of them, but in any case >he's< only a Technician and ineligible to test you anyway."

Why did you legitimize his inuendo and accusations with your remarks?

Dee, how would we have "acted" on incorrect information? which readers?

FDA Press Release

This listserv covers mainly Class I (life-threatening) recalls. A complete listing of recalls can be found in the FDA Enforcement Report at: http://www.fda.gov/opacom/Enforce.html

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
P07-41
March 9, 2007
Media Inquiries:
Mike Herndon, 301-827-6242
Consumer Inquiries:
888-SAFEFOOD

FDA Update on Peanut Butter Recall
As a follow-up to the recent Salmonella outbreak linked to peanut butter, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) is informing consumers that ConAgra has extended their recall of all Peter Pan peanut butter, and all Great Value peanut butter beginning with product code 2111, including peanut butter toppings, back to October 2004. This information was obtained recently as part of the ongoing investigation being conducted by FDA.

Consumers who have purchased any of the products since October 2004 should discard them. FDA's advice to consumers continues to be not to eat any Peter Pan peanut butter or any Great Value peanut butter beginning with the 2111 product code.

FDA will provide updates on recalled products, including any other products that may have been made with potentially contaminated peanut butter and distributed to consumers.

Symptoms of foodborne illness caused by Salmonella include fever, diarrhea and abdominal cramps. In persons with poor underlying health or weakened immune systems, Salmonella can invade the bloodstream and cause life-threatening infections or death. Individuals who have recently eaten peanut butter-containing products from these companies and who have experienced any of these symptoms should contact their doctor or health care provider immediately and report the illnesses to their state or local health authorities. Similarly, institutional food establishments and other food service providers who have received reports of illness from consumers after they consumed a product containing this peanut butter are encouraged to share that information with their local health department.

FDA is continuing to work closely with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and with states and local officials to identify how the contamination occurred in order to prevent similar foodborne illness outbreaks.

Pretty much. A textbook example of how a large segment of the "No Code Agenda" isn't about simply removing the code test, but instead is interested in destroying the mode itself, due to some irrational hatred of the mode of operation.

The funny part about Mark's rant is even if there were an adequate number of Extra-class operators around to give him a test, it is not outside the realm of possibility that those Extras might have been licensed after 2000, and could have only passed the fairly trivial 5wpm code examination to obtain their Extra-class license.

I seem to recall that too. And, if I remember correctly, the accuser wasn't even a licensed amateur at the time of the accusation.

Only Pro-Code Test Advocated trivialize the 5WPM Exam.

And exactly how does the 5WPM Exam disqualify them from being a VE?

I seem to recall a world famous DXer working out of band Frenchmen on 6 meters.

I seem to recall an RF Commando telling others how to live their amateur lives, all the while faking up a bunch of clubs and using an out of CONUS PO Box to glom up a whole bunch of DX callsigns.

Am I a pro-code test advocate?

For the vast majority of people (say, those who are not severely mentally retarded), the 5wpm is a trivial examination. It involves little more than a mental table lookup... "Dadidadit..... ummm... that's a C'".

Of course, there are always exceptions, and that's why VE teams could do a variety of things to aid people in passing their code examination (changing the tone of the tape, giving people more time to write things down during the test, etc. I'm sure Dee could tell us more on how VE teams can accomodate folks).

Memorizing the table requires some effort... but in reality probably little more effort than people put into 'memorizing' the question pools prior to taking an examination.

> And exactly how does the 5WPM Exam disqualify them from being a VE?

Did I state somewhere that a 5wpm examination disqualified them from being a VE? I must have missed that, or typed in invisible ink. I can't see it in my original posting.

I wouldn't know who world-famous DXers are. Virtually all my contacts are stateside. Never been much of a DX chaser myself.

Who might that be? Can you give an example how these folks tell "others how to live their amateur lives"?

Perhaps (for example purposes only) you mean some of these amateurs may have filed comments with the FCC calling for a reduction in code testing to 5wpm with a 'sunset clause' eliminating it altogether once the treaty requirement was removed?

So, you don't like those types of amateurs telling you how to live your amateur life, a-la removing the code test? Well, I suppose if you're a die-hard 20wpm code tester, I can see how you'd be upset by that. Have no fear though, Brian, you can continue to make those 20+wpm code contacts all you want, even with the pesky little code test gone.

> How many COLEM exams?

I've been to two. One for my General Radiotelephone and a 2nd for my GMDSS Operator/Maintainer license (needed that for my ocean-going trawler based in Washington, dontcha know). How about you?

That's incorrect. Anyone who passed a 13 wpm or 20 wpm Morse test could trivialize a 5 wpm exam. Five words per minute does not demonstrate Morse Code proficiency.

I don't believe it is possible for one to recall something in which he

So this DX'er was out of his allocation? or were the Frenchman out of theirs? Seems if the latter, than they are at fault. Perhaps being to good little soldier, you could report them to the Ohio Ag as well.

Hmmm, I seem to recall reading about a certian someone working people not only out band, but out of their allocation in a foreign country with no legal written authorization

I wasn't writing about the rest of the time. I expressed my view concisely. Since you've asked: Much of the time, you write like an insecure fellow with a chip on his shoulder. There have been occasions though, when you've posted something in a fairly rational manner.

To ascribe some sinister motivation to Dee Flint is at best, absurd.

No actually you proved the phrase, if it not for the Internet no one would no you're mental untable..but you did and there you are Actually when your trainer, that elderly person from the left coast first published it (many many time I might add), you were silent. When he recently reposted one of the phrases, you replied in what can be construded as an amused agreeable post. Your silence when he has posted these threats many times means you condone and therefore legitimize his threats. Seems you have this double standard :(

>> the violence threatened against others.
>
> Who were you threatening?

I threaten no one. What you read into a post is beyond any control other than yours. I would bet you would consider your own shadow as a threat When you watch TV, do you take all the news items as personal threats? I could see how you would. I was just retyping previous phrases that you already have approved of. Somehow, I don't think you are sincere in your beliefs, but that's OK, that's YOU

Just remember Bry Lithium is not just for batteries. Try it, you might like it

There is always the potential for that. Some General who reads this group might have thought he could give General tests. The paperwork would have bounced and then there would be a very irate Technician. Such would be grossly unfair to the that applicant.

Or a Technician might have been led to believe that a General could administer the General test and become hostile when the General VE refused.

In today's world, these things can even lead to violence.

Jim, this whole thread is NOT really about Volunteer Examiners.
It's just a place to vent spleens about OLD ARGUMENTS from olde-tymers who are still pissed off about having their self-righteous statements be the "law" of this (newsgroup) territory.

I was pleased with my local VE team's performance (all four, not just three) and congratulated them after the testing was over. [I observed them while they were observing me and the applicant group] However, that is not extendable to "all" VEs nor all those involved in this newsgroup. Most of the statements in this thread about VEs are just using it as a springboard to talk trash to other old "enemies." :-(

In other words, "politics" as usual...which you may be familiar with...<grin> :-)

In an extreme example, amateur radio station N2EY has to bring up the 1998 ARRLweb story of two FOUR-YEAR-OLDS who "passed" a Technician and Novice class written exam (respectively) as well as the required low-rate morse code test. An accompanying picture in the web story shows one of the VEs, of kindly grandfatherly mien, with arms around both of them. Obvious one-hankie kind of "feel-good" story that is no stranger to journalistic media everywhere.

Four year olds capable of responsible cognition of the written-English test material? Ask any working teacher of K to 3 classes if any of their students have either cognition or sense of responsibility about such test material. The end result will be an almost unamous NO, the won't. I've asked three that I know, plus one who was then a grade 4 teacher but later moved up to middle-school level when I had met him. What is rather obvious is that there was some "mentoring"

during the actual test, not allowed nowadays (nor in 1998 according to all the law-abiding whosis in here).
Ah, but the least little hint of "fraud" involved evoked a storm of PROTEST from the Believers of the League, angry denunciations of anyone who would DARE say nasty of their beloved ARRL.

On an almost constant irregular basis, amateur station N2EY has to bring this tidbit out in the open...and has for 8 years. It gets inserted into threads which don't involve VEs or testing as the general subject. Some in here burn and burn inside for the longest time...perhaps of unrequited spite that must have retribution.

The other "subject" is "Robesin," a soubriquet bestowed on one Steven James Robeson, licensee K4YZ - once K4CAP - then back to K4YZ. In all his 8-year-long claims of "18 years active military service in the USMC"
he has never offered nor put on any public view location any documented evidence of such service. Yet this "Robesin" has constantly hurled a stream of invective and personal abuse against anyone disagreeing with him, even to a minor degree. That has been going on for at least eight years in here, him turning the newsgroup into some personal battlefield where he thinks he is vanquishing his foes. "Robesin" claims to be a VE also,
yet hasn't shown us any documentation of that.

Brian Burke, USAF veteran and licensee N0IMD, has been unfairly treated to invective and personal abuse by this
"Robesin" and many other anonymous sociopaths in here.
His complaints are direct and justified...by all the archives of this newsgroup.

Let's take a realistic look at Volunteer Examiners. Are all VEs "saints?" No. They are human beings. Are they "exceptional" human beings? Perhaps, but exceptional in that they volunteer their time to proctor testing. Volunteerism happens in MANY different human endeavors, not just amateur radio. Do VEs need exceptional training to perform their tasks? No. All it requires is attention to paperwork, using the correct template to score test sheets, filling out the correct blanks on forms, keeping the test papers for an individual in order, double-checking each (in a team) other's work, making sure a test session's paper packet gets sent quickly to a VEC center for final processing (for big VECs) or direct to the FCC (for small VECs). Part of a VE team's task is to simply observe applicants, make sure they do not cheat, make sure they behave during a session, check their identity by other documents.

Is the example of one VE team applicable to the entire VEC?
No. None in here have presented any current time test session operations except Dee Flint and a couple of anonymous pseudonym individuals. All the rest is either blanket cheering and rah-rah ambiguous phrasing (that looks just like political spin operating on emotions) or the bringing to life of very dead-horse beating from years in the past.

Did the FCC do a "bad thing" on the "abdication" of government run radio operator testing? No and yes...it isn't a black and white issue. The FCC simply privatized the license testing process. The FCC has privatized many other tasks, notably frequency coordination among several other radio services, done by government and industry groups IN those radio service environments. The FCC was never chartered as an academic institution and "THE TEST" was never a certificate of either knowledge or experience in radio, nor of any kind of expertise. That was true of the FCC's predecessors all the way back to 1912. The FCC uses licensing as a tool of civil radio regulation, nothing more than keeping information on the type and kind of RF emitters, and where they are located, what particular activity they are involved in, and so forth. Being granted a license is NOT a diploma, NOT a degree, NOT a prize or notable achievement of mankind. It is simply recognition of being granted permission to emit a certain kind of RF energy as regulated by law using allocated modes and frequencies and at what maximum RF power levels and subject to all other regulations of that particular radio service.

We could sum that up in a single word...POLITICS. As far as I know you are the only one in here who has been really involved with THAT, eh? :-)

Oh crap... All the FCC really gutted was the code, the writtens are pretty much the same level of difficulty for the last 40 years. Sure, elements 4A and 4B were merged to just a shorter element 4, but the material you need to study and know is about the same. And as Len pointed out, ham writtens ain't exactly rocket science. An Extra license may be the equivalent to say a 4 credit college class. Or maybe two 3 credit classes.

He may have deed restrictions or landlord rules to deal with to put up a decent antenna for HF. I've put up crude HF dipoles in the attic crawl space above my top floor garden apartment. Find the access hatch probably in a bedroom closet, use a pair of heavy weights with holes, tie the antenna wire to it, and toss as far as you can get it in the attic crawl space. Repeat for the other leg of the dipole. I used a choke balun (just a big coil of coax to stop RF from traveling down the outside of the coax shield) at the feedpoint. The autotuner in my rig could load it. Once QSOed to a station in Antarctica on 20M using that.

We can't really argue with amateur radio station KH6HZ about morse code. To that station the use-availability-testing is all together in one melange of what that station calls "amateur radio."

Tsk. KH6HZ is simply emitting SPITE from his high-power emotional amplifier. Things get distorted at such over-driving.

That must be a fact known only to Hawaii-resident radio amateurs. It isn't recognized by the FCC.

I doubt we are "allowed" to mention that. It is "against" the good-ole-boy club of code-tested extras in here. :-)

Fraud is fraud, whether it is outright, legally-defined fraud or just "bad amateur practice." Those that are caught in either just don't want to admit their guilt.

At least one...for his GMDSS radio operator license so that he can be a "lecturer at a Massachusetts university (or whatever)."

I've only been to two exam sessions for radio operator licensing in my life. Once in 1956 at an FCC Field Office in Chicago, once in 2007 at an ARRL/VEC-run test site at the location of one station in the Los Angeles Auxiliary Communications Service.

I still regard the 1956 First Class Radiotelephone (Commercial) Radio Operator license exam (passed on the first try) as being the toughest. Others' mileage may vary. :-)

These are the number of current, unexpired FCC-issued amateur radio licenses held by individuals on the stated dates, and the percentage of the total number of active licenses that class contains.

Percentages may not add up to exactly 100.0% due to rounding.

These totals do not include licenses that have expired but are in the grace period, nor do they include club, military and other station-only licenses.

Effective April 15, 2000, FCC no longer issued new Novice, Technician Plus and Advanced class licenses, so the numbers of those license classes have declined steadily since then.

Also since April 15, 2000, FCC has renewed all existing Technician Plus licenses as Technician.
It is therefore informative to consider the totals of the two classes, since the Technician class includes a significant number of Technician Plus licenses renewed as Technician.

On February 23, 2007, the last Morse Code test element, the 5 wpm receiving test, was eliminated as a requirement.

The ARS License Numbers:

As of May 14, 2000:

Novice- 49,329 (7.3%)
Technician - 205,394 (30.4%)
Technician Plus - 128,860 (19.1%)
General - 112,677 (16.7%)
Advanced - 99,782 (14.8%)
Extra - 78,750 (11.7%)

Total Tech/TechPlus - 334,254 (49.5%)

Total all classes - 674,792

As of February 22, 2007:

Novice - 22,896 (3.5%)
Technician - 293,508 (44.8%)
Technician Plus - 30,818 (4.7%)
General - 130,138 (19.9%)
Advanced - 69,050 (10.5%)
Extra - 108,270 (16.5%)

Total Tech/TechPlus - 324,326 (49.5%)

Total all classes - 654,680

As of March 9, 2007:

Novice - 22,725 (3.5%)
Technician - 291,312 (44.5%)
Technician Plus - 30,243 (4.6%)
General - 132,863 (20.3%)
Advanced - 68,837 (10.5%)
Extra - 108,789 (16.6%)

Total Tech/TechPlus - 321,555 (49.1%)

You are proving to one an all that you are not really a practicing Jew, Mark. Each post that you make today is chillul Shabbath.

Soon your rabbi will declare you to be a Southern Baptist.

In the 1920's a radio station in Schenectady, NY built a powerful transmitter. In those days before FCC regulations, not knowing just how big to make a transmitter in order for the signal to be received some distance away, the station set up to broadcast at 500,000 watts. It requires about one watt to be received four blocks away. This station broadcast at such tremendous power that they could be heard around the world. People in New York didn't even need radios. They could sometimes hear voices in their furnaces and coming off chain-link fences. Light bulbs lit up in people's houses even if they were switched off. - from www.odd-info.com

How, exactly?

A quick search of Chassel, MI shows 19 licensed amateurs, 1 of which you live with.

What are your numbers and how did you arrive at them?

Since you've met them, you can provide their callsigns, right? I'd like to drop them an email to participate in this thread, so we can have their side of the story.

Why, If he took the Tech and Generals twice and passed them then upgraded to extra, he shouldn't have any trouble if he had to retake them again. And he doesn't owe any money to the fcc, stupid. AS you

Since "Morse" has been on topic for the last 12 years or so and is indeed the very reason that this newsgoup was created, I had no concerns at all that I was off topic. Did my post "The Music of Morse" offend you? If so, I apologize, but please answer:

What is it about Morse that set you off like lighting a firecracker in a wildcat's ass?

You can't claim someone "lied" simply because their figures are different.
You could also claim that there are 600K+ licensed amateurs in your "area", depending on how large of an "area" you want to use.

> that is not the region from which the VE';s of the area are drawn

It is safe to say that in areas with low population density, there will be an equally low number of licensed amateurs. Of those licensed amateurs, only 1/6th of them are likely to be Extra-class operators.

A quick search of one Jeff Hermann's PO Box used to show what?

C'mon Mad Dog Mike, you of all people should know that you don't have to reside in Chassel, MI to be a VE there.

I spuse I confused stave when I said Local as oposed to houghton/hancock area

and mike just followed suit

For the record I have never asked for session in chassell but one in Houghton in the same room that can be used by Husky ARS members and CCARS member almost anytime (if MTU is hosting some conference restrictions aplly)

Lets give Robesin the benefit of the doubt.

There might be plenty of local hams using Jeff Hermann's PO Box in Hawaii.

They were ARRL VEs, weren't they?

Why not?

Considering the number of statements you make to rrap, Len, it seems you are projecting your motivations on others.

You left out the most important parts of that story, Len.

First off, the 4-1/2-year-olds in question were from families composed almost entirely of radio amateurs, and were part of a an educational environment that included amateur radio as an integral part of the curriculum. Both could read and write well above age level.

Second, the written tests they passed were the old Novice and Tech elements.

Third, there has never been any objective evidence presented that the VE session in question was compromised in any way.

Fourth, your response to that story was to propose, in Reply Comments to FCC, that there be a new mandatory age requirement of 14 years for any class of amateur radio license.

Fifth, you have not been able to produce a single example of problems to the US Amateur Radio Service caused by a lack of an age requirement. Amateurs have been licensed by the US Government since 1912, yet in all those 85 years you cannot name even one actual problem caused by the licensing of people under the age of 14. Not one.

> Four year olds capable of responsible cognition of the > written-English test material?

Irrelevant, Len. "Responsible cognition" is not a requirement of the license test.

Doesn't matter.

The FCC has been using multiple-choice written exams for all amateur written elements for more than 40 years. The question pools have been publicly available for more than 20 years.

FCC does not require that a prospective amateur demonstrate understanding of the material, nor "cognition", nor a sense of responsibility. Nor is it necessary to get 100% correct on the test, or even 80%.

All FCC requires is that the prospective amateur get at least the required number of questions correct on the written test, without cheating. Nothing more. Doesn't matter to FCC if the prospective ham has a Ph.D in EE and a stack of patents, or is in the first grade. Doesn't matter to FCC if the prospective ham can explain each question and answer in exquisite detail, with exact formulas and calculations, or if the correct answer came from random guessing, or rote memorization.

All that matters to FCC is that the prospective amateur got at least the minimum required number of correct answers, without cheating.

When you allegedly asked those teachers, did you happen to mention that:

1) The test materials were available for study, so the children would have seen them before the test?

2) The questions were multiple choice, one out of four?

3) That as long as there was no cheating, any method of getting the right answer was OK?

4) That a passing grade was 74%, regardless of how much was actually understood?

I don't think so.

> What is
> rather obvious is that there was some "mentoring"

No, that's not obvious at all. You are claiming that the VE session was compromised. That's a serious charge.

You were not there, Len, and you don't know any of the people involved.

I have seen bright three-year-olds reading well above their age level.
Whether they understood what they read is besides the point.

> Ah, but the least little hint of "fraud" involved evoked a

Claims of fraud without any objective evidence deserve to be denounced as false.

I wonder if the VEs who handled your testing knew that you accused other VEs of fraud back in 2002?
Or that you accused the ARRL VEC of hypocrisy at the same time?

All without any evidence at all.

going around making threats".

And then you say, "most people don't like thier family memebers harrassed" but say, "what attack ? after all he claims he is not attacking me or my family when he posts lies about me where is the attack in posting the truth that he sired a defective daughter and failed to prevent her worthless existance in the womb at least these things are true if Stve is telling the Yanno, Mark, the "spoken word" is NOT like the "written word." This is NOT obvious at first, but you should darn well be figuring it out by now!

What I mean by that is that when you are in a spoken conversation there is a wealth of other data besides the speech to convey meaning and understanding--body language, smile/frown/grin, movement of the eyes, hand movement, crossing of the legs/arms, voice inflections, etc., etc. ...

In text communication there is none of the above, this makes it difficult sometimes, sometimes we are prone to "take the other guy the wrong way", patience, not "flying off the handle", giving the other guy/gal the benefit of the doubt, etc. come into REAL play, if you don't have these skills--you need to get them QUICKLY!

Trust me, not everyone is out to get you, if you keep feeling that way, see a shrink, PLEASE!

Besides all the above, some are just different, hold different ideas/views/wants, etc., etc.--you need to leave those guys alone if you can't handle the "art" of debate, argument and plain STRONG discussion, you'll live longer that way ...

Regards,
JS

Were you afraid? You said, "not stlaking just garden variety jerking you around it does not rise
to stalking till somebody makes a threat of violence so not quite"

Now you are stalking Dee, I see.

yes

when someone taken seriously responds without even noting that she is jioning calling my wife a man threatens us with incitment of further violnece

>You said, "not stlaking just garden variety jerking you
>around it does not rise

>to stalking till somebody makes a threat of violence so not quite"

never said that

and it does aplly threats have been made futhermore making antigay remakrs is threatening violence in most cases when done without any rational context as dee did when she chooses to repeat Robs

I'd consider the source and let it drop. I'd certainly NOT accuse the poster of "staking" or of many of the other myriad accusations you make. Norwould I whine about it in fifty to sixty posts per diem.

You are lying again. Heck, who knows? If you tell it often enough maybe someone will believe you.

I need not bother addressing a non-issue. I'll leave that entirely up to your odd thought processes.

Oh, here you go again. Whining. Did it hurt your sensitivities by being called Morkie?
Too bad.

Read Dee's posts again. Try to comprehend. Dee is fair and objective and has already discredited your goofy accusations.
She has not "enage"d in ANY name calling. Read her posts again and again until it sinks into that thick cranium of yours.
Your accusations ring as hollow as that head of yours, Morkie.

Oh, poor Morkie. Ever the "victum". Yet again, the derogatory comments made toward him are the fault of someone else and have nothing to do with his unabated habit of butting in on conversations and making himself a general thorn in the sides of others.
Many of us noted that, during a recent absence of Mark, this newsgroup actually reverted to a fairly pleasant group to visit. But, alas, this respite was all too brief and Morkie returned, only to trash it again.
Mark's absence was indeed a breath of fresh air.

Referring to you as Morkie is NOT name calling, despite your best attempts to twist it otherwise.
Now, if she'd called you an asshole, THAT would be name-calling.

> you are the proof of what I accuse her of giving activ e aid to my

You have "foes", whether real or imagined, because of your incessant and boorish flooding of this and other newsgroups. Dee offers no aid to anybody other than assisting fellow Amateurs to upgrade and further enjoy this hobby.

> >Your accusations ring as hollow as that head of yours, Morkie.

When I post sixty, seventy or more posts per diem, or 400 posts in any given month, then tell me I go "on and on".

And if I were as doltish as you, and if I were to be so stupid as to flood this group with spam demanding an "apology" from Steve, then you might be able to accuse me of going "on and on".
Again, Morkie, you prove over and over that you are obsessive/compulsive and lack touch with reality.

Yes, indeed. Your all too brief absence was a much welcomed breath of fresh air. Steve posted what? Five or six comments? And YOU responded as usual, with dozens.

Making ovservations of your strange habits is not name calling. I state facts. You certainly provide no shortage of ammunition.

Oh, but you do. And you have. I've saved many of your comments that blame Steve for your floods.

Yet you deny any responsibility for your responses, blaming them on Steve.
You are once again a "victum" of a vast, imaginary, newsgroup conspiracy spearheaded by Steve.

And exactly for the same reason that I commented that your pregnant mother should have borrowed a coat hanger and induced a miscarriage. The miscarriage, unfortunately, is alive and crapping on posts in Usenet.

Morkie is a term of endearment. Which dictionary do you use to come up with this "name-calling" definition?

Nobody said it is. We like you so much that we've affectionately adopted this pet name for you, Morkie.

nope But good to see you Tom nice to see you are the same as ever in point of the the only besides the law that precludes me giving them the Vald Tepes treatment is that they would never come near if I could

You enable Steve, dimwit. Has it ever crossed your dyslexic mind that if you were to simply ignore him, that he'd become bored and leave? Of course not. Nothing of any import crosses your jumbled mind.

> that legaly is a conspricay you know

No, I don't. Nor do you. You have no idea of what the legalities are in cases such as this. You make false accusations and accuse others of violating laws that exist only in your wildly paranoid head.

post sixty or more times in response?

This changes nothing. You are clearly a morally bereft and tortured soul. I

My option, Morkie. Like your various sock puppets to avoid Google's TOS, I'll use whichever nym I like.
In my case, since I use Altopia, I don't have to hide from the TOS that you must abide by.
Stop casting stones.

Explain, Morkie, why Gav sees fit to NOT take your last name if, indeed, the two of you are married as you claim.
You've already lied numerous times, so a few more will not hurt your already poor reputation.

And unlike others, I will not stoop to be so low as to accept the accusations that Gav is, like you, bisexual or perhaps has a male "member" dangling from her private area. Those accusations are clearly meant to goad you into further diatribes, and I will not join the fray.

Still, the question crosses my mind as to why Gav has not taken your last name as is traditional in most mainstream marriages. In all fairness, Morkie, it is no small wonder that others in this group question the veracity of your claim. Of course since Michigan does not allow same-sex marriages...well, I won't go there. I'll leave that up to Roger.

Perhaps this was the same VE team that tested the 4 1/2 year old? That way, they could likewise "mentor" old geezers during their examination, so said bitter old geezers could get their 'license'?

Not at all. You're the one who claims Steve "lied".

Steve made a factual statement, as did I. There are 19 licensed amateurs in Chasell. That is not a "lie". Anyone can go to QRZ and see for themselves

I dropped George an email containing links to the postings containing your accusations that his VE team is biased (very serious charges, as I'm sure you know, since they could affect his status as a licensed amateur.) Perhaps he'd like to comment. At the very least maybe he'll give you a call on the phone or stop by to have a chat with you.

I stand corrected.

Wouldn't that be a good reason for VEs to "pack heat"?

Blackmail is a very serious crime. One has to wonder why the Houghton County Prosecuting Attorney didn't haul Steve in 8.5 years ago...

ARRL PRESIDENT EMERITUS JIM HAYNIE, W5JBP, NAMED "AMATEUR OF THE YEAR"

(Why do I have the feeling a certain ex-ham from Maine is going to cringe when he reads this?)

Dayton Hamvention® <http://www.hamvention.org> has named ARRL
President
Emeritus Jim Haynie, W5JBP, as its 2007 Amateur of the Year.
Hamvention says Haynie's League leadership "helped define Amateur Radio's role in emergency communication." Hamvention also announced this week that ARRL Laboratory
Manager Ed Hare, W1RFI, will receive Hamvention's Special Achievement Award
to recognize his technical expertise in documenting the threat of interference from broadband over power line (BPL) systems. Internet
Radio
Linking Project (IRLP) <http://www.irlp.net> David Cameron, VE7LTD, was named the recipient of the Technical Excellence Award.

"I was astonished, and I'm deeply honored," Haynie said after getting word that he'd be receiving Hamvention's top award in May. "It's quite a recognition -- and quite a surprise."

A ham for 34 years, Haynie, who lives in Dallas, was West Gulf Division
Director for eight years and an ARRL vice president for two years. He then served three terms as the League's volunteer president, from 2000 until 2006, when he was succeeded by current ARRL President Joel Harrison, W5ZN.
Haynie's award nomination cited his "energy, tenacity and attention to detail that has transformed the American Radio Relay League from the service organization it was prior to 9/11 into the proactive, vital emergency service clearing house and educational operation that it is today."

During his tenure as League president, Haynie's effort to define Amateur

Radio's role in homeland security was among his top initiatives. In 2003, he signed a formal Statement of Affiliation between the Department of Homeland Security and ARRL. He has an abiding interest in emergency communication and has promoted Amateur Radio's emergency communication value and contributions on Capitol Hill and elsewhere.

Haynie also championed "The Big Project" -- now the ARRL Education and Technology Program (ETP) -- to bring ham radio and wireless technology into schools.

Is there anyone know how to measure the gain of a wifi antenna? Is there any kind of small measuring device that I can buy from the internet and measure it?

Thanks,

You know how Mark is. He makes up "laws" as he sees fit depending on the time and curcumstances.
In fact, one could well make the claim that Mark is unjustly and wrongfully accusing others of "staking", harrassment, and a myriad of other allegations that suit his fancy at the moment.

Mark is the little boy crying WOLF!

Yet, pointing this out to Mark time and time again flies right over his head. Mark sees only what he wants to see, reads into written comments that which he wants to read, while in reality his "spin" is so far from the truth as to garner guffaws from the rest of us.
Mark, unfortunately, will forever posit that he is the one being victimized. He lacks the native intellect to see otherwise.
"It is not my fault". "Steve made me do it". "I defedn my honor". "I don't shit on potses". "I donnot falme". "Dee called me Morkie". "The VEs are agianst me". "My life is thraetenned". "Gav is n ot a guy".

Gird yourself, for tomorrow Mark will respond with fifty or sixty posts or more. Oh, and he will once again hijack the topics as per usual.

He simply cannot fathom the fact that he is looked upon with derision by the majority of posters in this group.

So, Mark. Which crime are you going to accuse me of today? Or Dee? Or Steve? Or Roger? Or Mike? Or Dorothy and Toto?
Lets get this straight. If and when I respond to you, I am "stlaking" you. When Mike responds, he is "harassing" you. When Dee sets the record concerning VE's straight, she is "calling you names". When you flood the group with your idiocy, you are merely defending yourself, right?

Clearly, Morkie, your idiocy has no boundaries. Oops! That is harrassment, right? Oh, wait. I called you Morkie, so I am also guilty of name-calling. Note that I refrained from calling you a dumbass or a dip shit. I wouldn't do that lest you turn me over to your local prosecuting attorney. Since you have inside information on the latest laws of the land, and so often quote them, I will shy away from referring to you as a dumbass as has been done by others. However, Morkie, I will NOT cease referring to you as Morkie. If this displeases you and offends your dyslexic sensitivities, call your attorney. Have him subpoena Altopia so you can find out who I reallly am. Maybe Gav will front you the money from her waitress tips earned at the Green Light Lounge.

You, Morkie, are quite the socially dysfunctional idiot. I thought Roger had no redeeming qualities, but that was before I came into contact with you. Roger is lacking a few dominos here and there, but you, Morkie, have many mental issues that will forever be unresolveable.
Roger, despite his foul mouth, is rather fun to spar with. You, on the other hand, are an insufferable, fat, pissy little Bitch.

Now go forth and call your attorney. Or act as your own. Either way, the both of you will be pissing up a tree.

Happy Trails, Morkie. May your AZT help you and Gav prosper and live long....

No name calling. Mere observation of facts.
If one were given to name-calling, one could refer to you as a functional retard, or a shithead, or any number of descriptors. But far be it from me to do so.

Odd that a 4.5 year old can pass a test that you are incapable of.

Oh, wait! That is a conspiracy fomented by a few VE's that allegedly dislike you.
You are not well liked in many arenas. QRZ and NimBusters to name a couple.

Are you getting the drift?

The two of you seem to be fairly well-versed in such matters.

I trust that you are not allowed to live within 1,000 feet of a grade school.

OH? And from which law did you draw this odd Mark Morgan conclusion?
I was merely wishing you and Gav a happy and long life. Nothing, repeat, nothing was said about AIDS until YOU mentioned it.

Now, of course if you have a guilty conscience, well, I can't help that.

Rubbers, Mark. Rubbers. Live long and prosper.

I don't know that. None of us do. Given your propensity for falsehoods, nobody believes you.
You are well known as being an accomplished liar.

You may have a write-in degree in scatology, that I will not dispute.

Merely because I've been legally married to a WOMAN for more years than you've been posting here.
I've never, not once, ever entertained the idea of having sex with a man.

Dee was an unwitting accomplice in Robesin's plan. She could have snipped that part out if she had read it and understood what she was reading.

I doubt it.

Those 4-1/2 year olds were tested in Indiana. AF6AY was tested in California. AF6AY does not know and has never met anyone involved in the VE testing of those children back in 1998.
He simply ASSUMES that there is no way
they could have passed the tests honestly.

His proposed "cure" for that "problem" was to propose that no one under the age of 14 years be allowed to earn a US amateur radio license.

>That way,
> they could likewise "mentor" old geezers during their examination, so said > bitter old geezers could get their 'license'?

All the VEs and volunteer examiners I have known and met have been very careful to follow both the spirit and letter of the rules. That doesn't mean all VEs are perfect. Just that I don't have any first hand objective evidence of any VEs "mentoring" during a test. Neither does AF6AY have any first hand objective evidence of such behavior by those VEs in Indiana.

Of course there have been documented cases of VEs not following the rules to the letter. FCC has conducted investigations and retests. AFAIK, no such investigation has ever been done on the VEs discussed by AF6AY.

As for "bitter old geezers", there's never been any sort of age requirement, maximum or minimum, for any class of US amateur radio license. Nor should there be, IMHO, even though in recent years the worst violators of FCC rules for the Amateur Radio service have been in a certain age group. Ex-KG6IRO, who lived less than 25 miles from AF6AY

and was recently sentenced to seven years in prison
for radio-related crimes, is well past retirement age.
So is the unlicensed person in Florida (Flippo?) who is still behind bars IIRC.

Then there's the issue of the analogy between ARS rules changes and real estate zoning changes, but that's another thread....

Robesin has an attorney on retainer - gratis.

Then he started guessing who the attorney's new bride was sleeping with, right here on RRAP.

I wonder if Robesin will be well represented by such an attorney who offers to work for free then suffers Robesin's insults?

With Robesin, it's always about the wives...

I so don't care. But here's an interesting little factoid so that you'll sleep better at night:

You asked for my State's Attorney General and I gave his info to you, but I had merely reported you to your ISP.

You jump to conclusions then harass me when the AG office doesn't check on you. What an idiot.

No, he didn't. You may not agree with his statement, but just because you disagree with it doesn't mean he "lied". Factually, Steve's statement is correct. There are 19 licensed amateurs in Chasell, MI.

> the lie is asserting that the number of chassell hams is relavant to
> to the question

The number of area hams is pertinent to the question. If you live in a low population-density area, then the likelihood of having an adequate number of hams who are Extra-class VEs is likewise low, and thus, the number of possible test sessions low as well.

Compare this to a high population area, such as Boston:

http://www.arrl.org/arrlvec/examsearch.phtml?zip=02111&dist=100

or NYC:

http://www.arrl.org/arrlvec/examsearch.phtml?zip=10001&dist=100

which have 83 and 133 test sessions, respectively, scheduled in the near future.

> but indeed how could his refusaul to schedule a testing for his own > personal affect his license? you are lying a big one there

Your statements clearly indicated that you were denied a test session locally because the VEs in the area are "procoders" -- specifically in Message-ID: <05d0v2lchp420651eq38jruhklde0n0mnu@4ax.com>

Being denied a test session because you're a codeless tech would be a serious offense and could result in a VE teams credentials being revolked.

However, as I (and many others) suspect, you were not denied access to a test session because the teams consisted of "procoders", but instead because the VE team probably thinks you are an utter retard, or you made some type of "demand", such as a special examination session on Feb 23rd, when the VE team already had a test session scheduled for April 14th.

> he is welcome to explain why refused a request from myself and others > to do what was promised by him when he changed the number of test

> might be needed

Refer to what the first letter in the term VE stands for. Volunteer. If you asked for a special examination session, VE teams are in no way obligated to hold special test sessions for you, especially when they already have a session scheduled in a mere 6 weeks.

However, in typical Morkie Perpetual Victim fashion, you whine, stomp your feet, and cry "i discriminalgated agist by porcodrs!!!!"

If you feel there is adequate demand for more than 2 test sessions per year in Chasell, then you're welcome to take the requisite examinations, obtain VE certifications, and form your own VE team. However, if you do that, I suspect you'll be in here whining that "nobody showed up 'cuz we're no-code Extras".

> My wife would also be delighteted to discuss it with him since it > mean't she is still a tech since both of us could risk traveling to

A quick search yields a test session which was held yesterday under 100 miles from your home, by the Hiawatha ARA. What was wrong with that one? Are they all Procoders too? Otherwise it looks like you'll have to wait until CCRAA has their next test session on April 14th.

More rubbish.

Since there are several states which allow same-sex marriages, it is not outside the realm of possibility that Mark's 'wife' is male.

I also think that the majority of the legitimately signed participants here could care less one way or the other if Mark's wife is male, female, or a holstein cow.

An individual's mental state plays no role when local officials investigate whether or not a crime has been committed. For example, you don't get a free pass from commiting armed robbery simply because your IQ is under 80.

In fact, if anything, they are more likely to do "something" (even if it involves calling the person on the phone and telling them to 'back off') if they suspect the individual is of dubious mental abilities.

I suspect what "really" happened is both the local DA and the 'FBI' both thought the person filing the complaint was a 'total nut job' and opted to tell you to go away.

no in fact there are not

I do not live in chassel nor does my wife onor at least one other of that 19 we merely get our mail through the post office there we neither live cthe village of chassell nor the township

no Mike I don't likely I'll get my extra at AES supperfest in march, if the weather is good enough to leave my dad alone then my wife wil get her general at that time

I do wish you could tell the truth about much of anything Mike but given your track record with the FCC I supose that is beyond you

However, should there be periodic retesting, such as with driver's licenses?
It would be a shame, for instance, if a geezer's amplifer malfunctioned, arc'd over to his oxygen bottle, and an explosion resulted.

Oh my gosh gee whiz there Bry You stated previously that you reported this to the Ohio AG. Now you back pedal and state you reported to my ISP. Which one is the truth there Bry? Taking lessions from Marcus Stupideous I C.

No problem, My ISP, if indeeed I am posting from them gave you comlaint the same weight and thoght as I imagine the Ohio AG did NONE!!!! ha ha he he

You make me raff

How can you be harrassed in a public forum there BRY? No one forces you to read anything, no one forces you you to reply. Taking lessons from thae ither trained monkey Marcus Idiotous I C

Feel free to report me to the FCC as well there Bry. I am sure they'll give you the same consideration as the others

You very funny man, you make me raff or on this case ralph

Ta ta Turtle man give my regards to the rest of the Bizzaro people

Hey Bry could be a new Batman villian... Bluster Man a villian who attempts to defaet his enemies with lies, inneuendo and various blustery phrases
